those numbers, and as no conceivable amount of gerrymandering could change the political complexion of either of these or of any of the districts adjoining, I presume this arrangement will not be complained of. This is the plan which the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] and the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] so harshly criticize. Would it not be well for gentlemen who complain to propose a scheme which, as a whole, would be better? There is not it is true, entire equality of population in the districts; but there is no such disparity as would work real injustice or even inconvenience. Compactness of territory and convenience of communication have been regarded, and properly so, as of more importance than exact equality of population. The political bearings of the proposed districts have been alluded to. Though this consideration did not enter into the judgment of the committee, it has crept into this discussion, and may, therefore, be referred to in its practical aspect. Of the proposed eight districts there would probably be three democratic and five republican. This would give to the democrats thirteen and to the republicans twenty Senators. Under the present system of single districts, the democrats have five and the republicans twenty-seven senators. This ought to dispose of the complaint that the plan recommended by the committee does injustice to the democratic party. If that party cannot avail itself of its nearly equal aggregate strength in the State with the republicans, to secure a proportionate number of Senators, the difficulty must be other than one of purpose. It lies really in the accident of location. The great democratic preponderance is in one corner of the State, while the republican strength lies broadcast over the whole interior, in such a manner that no division could be made without the grossest and most outrageous injustice that would give republicans less than five districts. If the fourth, sixth and fourteenth wards of New York could be attached to the Fourth district, in place of the counties of Washington, Essex and Saratoga, it is true the republican preponderance in St. Lawrence might be overcome, and a democratic district established where there is now a republican one, especially if the plan of "repeaters" referred to the other day by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and other favorite election appliances peculiar to New York city could be transferred to that district; but unless some earthquake system like this be adopted, no democratic district could be by any possibility established north or west of Albany. I will simply say in conclusion, that if it be the sense of the Convention, that there should be eight senate districts, the plan of the committee is a fair and practical one. Either it or a wholly new scheme must be adopted; for a change in one district involves a change in some other district; and the continuity once broken, a general rebuilding becomes necessary; mere patch-work will not suffice.

Mr. BARKER—The question before the committee is, whether the present arrangement of electing Senators by single districts shall be continued, or that of electing by large districts, as recommended in the report, and provided by the Constitution prior to 1846, shall prevail. Upon that proposition I desire to ask the attention of the committee for a few moments. The change that has been recommended by the committee in this respect is not altogether fundamental. It is necessarily based upon observation and experience, and unless it can be demonstrated that some advantage is gained by the change, then I apprehend this Convention will not recommend a return to the system of large districts. All modern representative governments divide the legislative branch into two departments, and for the reason that the people being represented through the Legislature may by their own votes have a check upon the legislative action of their own servants, and hence the two departments are created. It is that each may be independent in its character, each have a check upon the other, and prevent hasty and unwise legislation and the maturing of corrupt schemes. Now, this is better effected by the plan as reported by the committee than by adhering to the present system; for to have the full advantage of the plan which I have stated, these two bodies must be elected at different times. If they are elected upon the same day and by the same constituency, there is nothing gained by dividing them into two chambers; they may as well be in one body and deliberate together, as to be separate. Hence, they should be elected by a different constituency, at different times, and have a different tenure of office. I submit that by the single district system these advantages are practically lost. The constituencies are nearly the same as those of the Assembly, they are often nominated by the influence of the same public men, are controlled by the same political considerations, and are elected at the same election every other year, and in spirit, in policy and effect, the same as if the legislative power was vested in one legislative body. It is suggested by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], who offers this amendment, that the people are not directly represented if we go back to these large districts. I apprehend that is a simple fallacy. It is a common statement to make; it is pleasant to one's own lips; it is sometimes a satisfactory reason to one's own self as an argument, to state so popular a proposition; but is not the legislative department of this State when created under the system proposed by the committee a direct representation of the people? It is in every practical sense and is satisfactory to the people. I submit further that another advantage that is gained by the State is in having experience and intelligence in the members. That is all that a free people need to secure wise legislation, and to raise the legislative department of the government above the often repeated, and as I think, unfounded and unsustainable charge of corruption against legislators, and I submit that we have had experience enough to demonstrate that a man must be in public life before he is fully competent to discharge all the duties of a public position. No judge is ripe in his experience and entirely commands the respect of the people, without experience, no lawyer gains reputation without experience, no financier is successful without experience, and in my judgment, the State of fourth district with the county of St. Lawrence. It has been well said by the delegate from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], that those two counties, so far removed from each other in the extreme opposite portions of the State, and having very little communication cannot be so competent to choose candidates who may be presented on one side or the other. The county of Albany, a democratic county, is thus placed in the fourth district and overwhelmed by the political majority on the other side, when, by being left in the third district, it would much better equalize the population, and it would at least be left to a fairer chance as far as the result is concerned. I complain, therefore, that Albany county is placed in the fourth district, and ask that it may be restored to the third, where it has been in the past, in the judicial district, and in former times in the senatorial district. Now, if a proper equalization can be made of these districts, I should certainly prefer this district system, upon the general idea of the plan reported. I do not see myself where the difficulty is in taking the map of the State of New York, and the result of the census, and dividing it up into either eight or ten districts, fairly and equally, without any great disparity certainly between the different districts. I believe it could be done, but it can only be done now by referring it back to the committee for that purpose. I do not believe it can be done by amendments offered here. As between these as presented, I shall adhere to the present single district system, unless the plan proposed by the delegate from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] shall be shown to be practical and feasible, and in that case I shall most certainly support it. If any system can be devised which will give a just and proper representation to the minority, I will support it, and I believe the time is not far distant when a system like that will receive the support of all political parties. I think unless some step is taken to make this system more equal and more just in its results, I will have no other way but to fall back on the single district system.

Mr. GERRY—I move the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

SEVERAL DELEGATES—"Oh no!" "Oh no!"

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Gerry, and on a division it was declared lost.

Mr. FULLERTON—I am opposed to dividing the State into only eight senatorial districts, but do not propose even to attempt to make a speech on the subject. I will content myself with merely stating the grounds of such opposition. By the Constitution of 1846, the State was divided into thirty-two senatorial districts. I believe this division has proved satisfactory to the people. At least I do not understand that any complaint has come from them to this Convention against it, or that any prevails to any considerable extent. While senatorial districts may be too small, it is equally true that they may be too large, and the endeavor should be to fix upon a medium between the two extremes. When a division is made that answers the convenience and meets the approbation of the mass of the electors of the State, that division should be adhered to. Such a division we now have, and until it can be demonstrated that it is either complained of by the people, or works to the prejudice of the interests of the State, there should be no radical departure from it. My second objection consists in the fact that by large districts, such as are recommended by the committee, the Senator is too far removed from the knowledge of the constituency which elects him. Representation should always be brought as nearly home to the represented as may be practicable. The people always desire to know something of those who are presented to them for their suffrages. When a candidate for any office comes before them for their support, they desire an acquaintance with his standing as a man, and his qualifications and fitness for the office he seeks. And when a senatorial candidate is presented to them, they ought to be able to judge of his ability to represent them as one of the law-makers of the State. This can only be so to a very limited extent under the system of divisions recommended by the committee. Again, I object because it is going back to a plan of division that has once been tried, and most emphatically condemned. A change from eight to thirty-two senatorial districts was made by the Convention of 1846, and, according to my understanding, that change was made because the plan of large senatorial districts had been very universally condemned. It had been tried, found fault with by the people, and many of the delegates to the Convention of 1846 came here under instructions to favor single senatorial districts. And, as I understand it, the change was demanded because the old plan was too inconvenient, and because the candidate and his constituents were too far removed from each other. I submit, therefore, that it would be unwise to adopt the recommendation of the committee and go back to a plan or system that has once been tried and rejected.

Mr. ALVORD—I do not propose, at this time, to enter largely into a discussion of the question before the committee. I am decidedly, so far as I myself am concerned, in favor of a small number of districts. I believe it has worked admirably in the past history of this State, and that it has been a departure in the wrong direction since we have adopted the single district system. I had hoped that I would be enabled to offer a proposition which seems to me entirely fair, and when the opportunity shall arrive for so doing, I shall endeavor to bring it before the Convention for its consideration. My idea simply is this, we should make eight senatorial districts in this State, making the city of New York one of these districts, calling it the first. It is entitled by its population and position to a representation in the Senate of six senators, against four each for the other seven districts, and that we should leave it to the Legislature of the State in future to settle the boundaries of the other seven districts. I trust, therefore, with this in view that the committee will think and reflect upon this matter before they come to any decision as antagonistic to the idea of eight rather than thirty-two or more single districts, and it is for this purpose only that I have thrown out this idea at this time, because I think it is entitled to a very considerable consideration, and it will relieve a great many men here of any ag-the direction of the Legislature in the year 1855, and at the end of every ten years thereafter; and the said districts shall be so altered by the Legislature at the first session after the return of every enumeration, that each senate district shall contain, as nearly as may be, an equal number of inhabitants, excluding aliens and persons of color not taxed." It means aliens not taxed, and there can be no other construction given to that phrase.

Mr. RATHBUN—I wish to inquire of the gentleman if he observed the comma which is there after the word "aliens." He seemed to read as though there was none there.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—No, sir, there is no comma. In conformity to that basis we find in our statistical tables the enumeration made in 1855 taken of the inhabitants excluding persons not taxed only. I have gone through with the apportionment made by the committee upon the basis of the population excluding persons not taxed only, and I call the attention of the committee to the result of it. Upon that basis New York, with five Senators, has a surplus of 142,607; the second district upon that basis of population, persons not taxed only, has a surplus of 70,299; the third district has a deficiency of 55,570; the fourth district has a surplus of 2,265; the fifth district has a deficiency of 24,842.

Mr. COOKE—May I ask the gentleman a question? I want to know what the gentleman's ratio is?

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I take the population, excluding persons not taxed, at about 115,000, as the Senate ratio; 575,000 as the ratio for five Senators, and 460,000 for four Senators. The fifth senate district has a deficiency of 24,842; the sixth district has a deficiency of 52,863; the seventh senate district has a deficiency of 60,267, and the eighth senate district a deficiency of 23,301. The population of the second senate district exceeds the population of the third senate district by 125,769; it exceeds the population of the fourth senate district by 68,034; it exceeds the population of the fifth district by 95,141; it exceeds the population of the sixth district by 123,162; it exceeds the population of the seventh district by 130,556, and it exceeds the population of the eighth senate district by 93,600. I ask where is the equality in that apportionment? I had always supposed that representation should be made equal, as near as may be, and here we see that the second senate district exceeds some of the other of the ratio senate districts to an extent entitling them to an additional Senator. Take the population as claimed by the committee, excluding aliens only. There we find that the first senate district has an excess of 55,298; the second has an excess of 48,669; the third has a deficiency of 33,944; the fourth has an excess of 9,833; the fifth has a deficiency of 6,928; the sixth has a deficiency of 16,925; the seventh has a deficiency of 40,049; and the eighth has a deficiency of 16,985. The population of the second senatorial district, upon the basis adopted by the committee, exceeds the population of the third senatorial district by 82,613; it exceeds the population of the fourth district by 38,836; it exceeds the population of the fifth district by 55,597; it exceeds the population of the sixth district by 65,654; and that of the seventh by 83,718, and that of the eighth district by 65,654. Now, Mr. President, I cannot conceive why this committee should go to the judicial district apportionment for the purpose of apportioning the State in reference to the Senators. That is a division that was not made originally in reference to population. It was made for a judicial district, and the law was not made in reference to population, but it was rather in reference to the convenience of the suitors at court, and the convenience of the judges, than in reference to the population. Why, then, should the committee take that apportionment and make such inequality in representation throughout the State? It appears to me, sir, that if this report is to be adopted at all, and the Convention is to regulate the senate districts, it should be referred back to the committee for re-apportionment.

Mr. GREELY—I would ask the gentleman to allow me to make a remark which may shorten this discussion. I will say, though not at liberty to speak for the political majority in Westchester, that if this apportionment of eight senate districts stands, I shall on behalf of the republicans of Westchester county very (and I know I represent their sentiments) earnestly ask that our county be placed in the third district instead of the second. It will be an advantage to us politically, and I trust this Convention will not keep us out.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I care not where the gentleman intends to locate himself; I am engaged now in the discussion of the inequality of the senatorial districts. We look at these senatorial districts throughout every portion of the State, and we find that there is an inequality everywhere. In the western portion of the State they are small. Take the eastern portion of the State and they are large. As between the two propositions before the committee, the one is for the old system of thirty-two single senatorial districts, and the other is for eight large senatorial districts. I myself would prefer the division of the State into eight or ten senatorial districts and have four Senators from each, but if this apportionment is to stand, as between this proposition and the one for thirty-two single senatorial districts, I shall go for that rather than take this improper and unequal apportionment.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I find myself unable to concur with the committee who have had this question under consideration, and reported their views to the Convention. But although differing from the committee, I do not concur in any of the remarks which have been made disparaging the conduct of these gentlemen. I have no doubt they discharged their duty with a high sense of the obligation that has rested upon them. They have discussed the subject I have no doubt among themselves faithfully, and have honestly and honorably reported the result of their deliberations as resting in their own mind. But the report of the committee is not conclusive upon the Convention however much the Convention may respect the gentlemen who make it. And with that view I hold myself at liberty to adopt my own conclusions, the report notwithstanding, and they are fourth district with the county of St. Lawrence. It has been well said by the delegate from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], that those two counties, so far removed from each other in the extreme opposite portions of the State, and having very little communication cannot be so competent to choose candidates who may be presented on one side or the other. The county of Albany, a democratic county, is thus placed in the fourth district and overwhelmed by the political majority on the other side, when, by being left in the third district, it would much better equalize the population, and it would at least be left to a fairer chance as far as the result is concerned. prehension of an undue representation or want of representation on the part of the city of New York, and leave the division of the balance of the State to be determined by the action of the Legislature in future, when they can determine it better than we can at the present time.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. E. A. Brown, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 51 to 42.

Whereupon the committee rose and the PRESIDENT pro tem. Mr. ALVORD resumed the Chair in Convention.

Mr. ARCHER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization etc., had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith had directed their Chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on granting leave and it was declared carried.

Mr. CLINTON—I rise simply to ask leave of absence to-morrow for one day.

There being no objection leave was granted.

On motion of Mr. WEED, the Convention adjourned.

FRIDAY, August 2, 1867.

The Convention met at 10 o'clock A. M. The PRESIDENT pro tem. Mr. ALVORD, in the Chair. The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY and approved.

Mr. BARKER—I rise to a question of privilege. I think this is the proper time to call the attention of the Convention to a question of privilege which not only relates to me personally but to most of the members of this Convention. It is remissness on the part of the committees in not making their reports to this Convention. It is well known, or at least the idea is entertained, that the committee will soon dispose of the pending proposition and then we are to take up another which cannot in any event have been reported but a short time to this Convention, and I believe it is a just cause of complaint that many of the committees have not made their report, so that the members of this Convention could know what proposition they are to consider, and that their minds might be maturing upon these subjects. When we dispose of the pending proposition, what is to be the next report? What member of the Convention can come to any conclusion upon a proposition upon which he is called upon to vote. I know that three or four committees have reported, but there are yet some twenty-two reports to be made to this Convention, and with all due deference to the members of the respective committees, I submit they are remiss in their duties. This is my question of privilege, and I hope some action will be taken by which the Convention will call upon the members of the committees to be more prompt in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. E. BROOKS—If this is to be regarded as a question of privilege—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion it is not.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I ask permission of the Convention to say a word in reply to the gentleman who has just taken his seat. If this is to be regarded as a question of privilege, I respectfully submit that it is the Convention itself which has been remiss in its duties, rather than the respective standing committees of the Convention. You vote that we shall meet at ten o'clock in the morning, and then again at four o'clock in the afternoon, and you have established a rule that we shall meet here also at half-past seven o'clock in the evening. With the long sessions that have been in this body during the three weeks past, it is physically impossible for the committees to meet and enter upon the proper discharge of the great interests committed to them. The fault, therefore, is with the Convention rather than with the committees.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN, from the Committee on the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, etc., submitted the following report:

The standing Committee on the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, their election, tenure of office, compensation, powers and duties, except as otherwise referred, respectfully report the following article as the result of their deliberations:

They have not deemed it necessary or advisable to recommend many amendments to article 4 of the existing Constitution; believing that no very essential change is demanded, except in such particulars as they have designated.

They have accordingly submitted copies of the first, second, third, sixth and seventh sections of that article, and are in favor of their entire adoption. They prefer to use language as far as practicable, which has been settled and approved by long and well established usage and judicial construction, rather than to adopt a new and unsettled phraseology which would not be so well calculated to secure the continued existence of provisions which they have unanimously approved.

They have proposed to amend the fourth section, by providing that the compensation of the Governor shall be established by law. While your committee are fully of the opinion that the present compensation is far less than the Chief Magistrate of the Empire State should be entitled to receive, they believe it not wise or expedient to name or determine its amount in the Constitution, but have proposed that it be first fixed by the Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, in order that it may not be subject to the caprices and temptations of Legislative enactment, after the election of the successful candidate, or during his continuance in office.

To the section providing for the compensation of the Lieutenant-Governor, your committee have added the clause, that when the Legislature shall have determined its amount by law, he shall not receive or be entitled to receive, any additional compensation, fees or perquisites, for any other duties or services he may be required to perform, by virtue of his office, or in any other capacity. The reasons for inserting this restriction, must be perfectly obvious to every member of the Convention, and it is unnecessary to detail them here. They will be cheerfully stated, if called for in Committee of the Whole, or in the Convention.

It is proposed to amend the section relating to the veto power, by requiring a vote of two-thirds of the whole number composing each branch of the Legislature, to pass a bill notwithstanding the objections of the Governor.

By the existing Constitution, no bill can be passed, unless by the assent of a majority of all the members elected to each house; and yet, if the Governor shall object, each house, on a reconsideration, may approve of such bill by a vote of two-thirds of all the members present, and it will then become a law; thus, in effect, not only greatly weakening and rendering, in a manner, utterly powerless the objections of the Executive, but also virtually annulling that part of the section, requiring in the first instance a vote of a majority of all the members elected.

The propriety of the proposed amendment cannot be reasonably doubted, and its necessity under the alarming evils, which have existed for the last ten years, and which there is great reason to fear will continue and increase unless effectually restrained and prevented, will, in the judgment of your committee be manifestly apparent.

It will be perceived that your committee have had under consideration the resolution referred to them of Mr. Dwight, of Oneida. They have deemed it expedient, not only to incorporate the provision contemplated by the resolution, but to extend the power of the Governor so that he may approve of any part or parts of a bill, containing separate and distinct provisions, and disapprove of any other part or parts of the same bill.

It has not unfrequently been the case that bills proposing to enact wholesome and salutary laws have also contained provisions of so objectionable a character as to prevent their approval by the Governor, and thus many measures highly conducive and almost indispensable to the public welfare have been defeated, or have been preserved only by carrying with them enactments highly odious and offensive. Indeed, it is well known that obnoxious propositions have been artfully inserted in bills, for the purpose of enforcing their enactment, under the calculation, not often ill-founded, that honest members of the Legislature would be induced to suffer them to pass into laws, rather than to lose the benefit of the unobjectionable features.

In other instances, they have been introduced during the last stages of legislation; and amid the hurry, and confusion, and excitement, always prevailing at such a time, they have been precipitated into laws, when if they had been proposed in separate bills, they never could have received the sanction of the Legislature. The substance of the clause suggested in the referred resolution, with the addition recommended by the committee, has therefore been inserted in the eighth section. Your committee have deemed it expedient to determine that the time for signing bills shall cease with the adjournment of the Legislature, instead of leaving the power unlimited as it now is, and enabling the Governor to sign them at any time during the recess.

This amendment your committee believe they cannot recommend too strongly to the favorable consideration of the Convention. It is unnecessary to enter into details of the reasons for its expediency or propriety. They will readily commend themselves to the minds of the Convention. The requirement will not only serve as a more sure protective against all fraud and corruption, which may be attempted on the part of those interested in the passage of bills, but will no doubt greatly relieve the executive from ceaseless and incessant importunities and temptations to which the unscrupulous and designing are ever ready to resort. It will, in short, in the judgment of your committee, serve as a great additional safeguard to the interests of the State. The objection that bills passed during the last few days of the session may thus fail to become laws, can be obviated by the Legislature, and they can easily accommodate themselves in the passage of bills to this restriction. It is scarcely necessary to add that it is in harmony with the Constitution of the United States, in respect to the power of the President to sign bills passed by Congress which has always proved eminently successful, and has met with the approbation of all since the organization of the general government. With these amendments your committee respectfully submit the whole article, and recommend its adoption by the Convention.

ARTICLE.

SECTION 1. The executive power shall be vested in a Governor who shall hold his office for two years; a Lieutenant-Governor shall be chosen at the same time and for the same term.

§ 2. No person except a citizen of the United States shall be eligible to the office of Governor, nor shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained the age of thirty years.

and who shall not have been five years next preceding his election, a resident within this State.

§ 3. The Governor and Lieutenant-Governor shall be elected at the time and places of choosing members of the Assembly. The persons respectively having the highest number of votes for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor shall be elected; but in case two or more shall have an equal and the highest number of votes for Governor, or for Lieutenant-Governor, the two houses of the Legislature at its next annual session shall forthwith by joint ballot choose one of the said persons so having an equal and the highest number of votes for Governor or Lieutenant-Governor.

§ 4. The Governor shall be commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces of the State. He shall have power to convene the Legislature (or the Senate only) on extraordinary occasions. He shall communicate by message to the Legislature at every session the condition of the State, and recommend such measures to them as he shall judge expedient. He shall transact all necessary business with the officers of the government, civil and military. He shall expedite all such measures as may be resolved upon by the Legislature, and shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed. He shall at stated times receive for his services a compensation to be established by law, to be first fixed by the Legislature at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, and which compensation shall neither be increased or diminished after his election or during his term of office.

§ 5. In case of the impeachment of the Governor or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, resignation or absence from the State, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant-Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease. But when the Governor shall, with the consent of the Legislature, be out of the State in time of war, at the head of a military force thereof, he shall continue commander-in-chief of all the military forces of the State.

§ 6. The Lieutenant-Governor shall possess the same qualifications of eligibility for office as the Governor. He shall be president of the Senate, but shall have only a casting vote therein. If during a vacancy of the office of Governor, the Lieutenant-Governor shall be impeached, displaced, resign, die, or become incapable of performing the duties of his office, or he be absent from the State, the President of the Senate shall act as Governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability shall cease.

§ 7. The Lieutenant-Governor shall receive for his services a compensation to be established by law, to be first fixed by the Legislature at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, and which compensation shall neither be increased or diminished, after his election or during his term of office, and he shall not receive or be entitled to any other or further compensation, fees or perquisites for any other duties or services he may be required to perform by virtue of his office by this Constitution or by law.

§ 8. Every bill which shall have passed the Senate and Assembly, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor. If he approves of the bill he shall sign it. But if he disapprove of it, or of any part or parts of it containing separate and distinct provisions, he shall return it to that house in which the bill shall have originated, with his objections to the whole, or such part or parts of it as he shall disapprove, which shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration either of an entire bill or of a part or parts of said bill objected to, as the case may be; two-thirds of all the members elected to that house, shall agree to pass the whole bill, it shall be sent together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of all the members elected to that house it shall become a law, notwithstanding the objections of the Governor. If either of the two houses shall not thus approve of the part or parts objected to, the bill containing such part or parts as shall be approved by the Governor shall without unnecessary delay, after the vote is taken on such reconsideration, be engrossed as a separate bill, and returned to the Governor for his signature. But in all such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each house respectively. If any bills shall not be returned by the Governor within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Legislature shall by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law. The right of the Governor to sign bills shall cease with the adjournment of the Legislature.

The report was referred to the Committee of the Whole, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN, from the same committee, submitted the further following report:

The standing Committee on the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, etc., to which was referred the resolution of Mr. Develin, instructing it to consider the propriety and expediency of limiting the veto power to questions of constitutionality exclusively, respectfully report; that they have had the resolution under consideration, and have come to the conclusion that it would not be wise or expedient to limit this power as proposed by the resolution. Your committee believe that it has always been regarded as one of the surest safeguards against hasty, improvident and corrupt legislation. They are decidedly of the opinion that the instances would be rare, in which measures would be adopted or bills passed, containing provisions clearly and palpably unconstitutional. But while they entertain no doubt on this subject, they are fully convinced that the veto power should not be confined to cases of such improbable occurrence and which can always be controlled by the courts. On the contrary it should be retained and preserved as a check to inconsiderate measures, which may be often hurried through the Legislature and become laws highly detrimental to the public weal.

The wisdom of the framers of the Constitutions of 1821 and 1846, in incorporating this measure into those instruments, is clearly apparent to your committee; and the history of the Legislature of the State for the past ten years, and of the necessary and timely exercise of its salutary influence by the Executive, has served to strengthen their conviction of the correctness of the conclusion to which they have arrived.

Your committee, therefore, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

C. L. ALLEN, Chairman.

Mr. DUGANNE, from the Committee on Industrial Interests, submitted the following report:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Industrial Interests not otherwise referred, to whom was referred the memorial of H. C. Spaulding relative to the drainage of agricultural lands, beg leave to report: That they have duly considered the subject, and have instructed their chairman to recommend the following section to be a part of the amended Constitution, viz.:

SECTION.—The Legislature may pass laws authorizing and permitting parties owning or occupying lands, to construct agricultural drains across the lands of other parties, when such drains shall be necessary; and under proper restrictions and under proper remuneration.

And they ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. DUGANNE from the same committee submitted the further following report:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the report as follows:

The Committee on Industrial Interests having considered the resolution referred to them July 9th, on the right of the people of this State to catch and take fish in certain waters of the State, beg leave respectfully to report:

That at the last session of the Legislature, an act was passed ostensibly for the preservation of "moose, wild deer, birds and fresh water fish;" and that said act, becoming a law, has injuriously affected an important industrial interest of the State, more particularly on the river St. Lawrence, whose fisheries afford employment and subsistence to not less than ten thousand persons in the county of Jefferson alone.

Your committee do not deem it proper to propose the constitutional assertion of any right which might hereafter conflict with necessary legislation for the preservation of game or regulation of fisheries at certain seasons; but, inasmuch as certain lakes and rivers of the State are so located as to be accessible for fishing purposes to the inhabitants of an alien country, as well as to our own citizens, and, in consequence of this fact, no restrictions upon our citizens can restrain aliens from taking fish in the same waters, but will only operate to give the said aliens an undue advantage over citizens of this State, your committee have unanimously directed their chairman to recommend that the following section be, in its proper place, embodied with the Constitution.

SECTION.—"The right to take and catch fish in any of the international waters bordering on this State, and the rivers and bays thereof, and to dispose of such fish, shall not be denied or restrained."

Mr. EVARTS—Would it be in order to move that this report and the subject be referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that motion is now in order.

Mr. EVARTS—Then I move it be referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Evarts, and it was declared carried.

Mr. EVARTS—A reference was made by the Chair of the report from the Committee on Industrial Interests, on the subject connected with the right of drainage—that is of affinity with the right of private ways; it is a part of the bill of rights, and, if it is in order, I now move that that report shall be referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights. I think it will facilitate the action of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair holds that it is now in order.

Mr. DUGANNE—I will state that it was the intention of the committee that those two propositions should be referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Evarts, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BEADLE—The Committee on Banking and Insurance, and the standing Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, Banking and Insurance, finding in the discharge of their duties and the consideration of the subjects referred to them, that it was probable from the similarity of subjects that any separate report made by either committee was likely to trench upon or conflict the one with the other, have united in their meetings and consultations, and ask leave to make a joint report.

Mr. BALLARD, from the two several Committees on Currency, Banking and Insurance, and on Corporations other than Municipal, Banking and Insurance, submitted the following joint report:

ARTICLE VIII.

SECTION 1. Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created or amended by special act, except for municipal purposes. All general laws (and special acts) passed pursuant to this section, or which may have been heretofore passed, may be altered from time to time or repealed.

§ 2. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporations and other means as may be prescribed by law.

The wisdom of the framers of the Constitutions of 1821 and 1846, in incorporating this measure same requirements. Therefore I do not say what laws apply to each particular section of the Constitution applicable to this topic.

That a clause should be inserted in the Constitution providing that no business in this State should be done here for the punctual performance of obligations, leaving the Legislature to fill in the details. The present laws of insurance companies.

subject of incorporations is to combine the action of many, as one artificial person exemption from personal responsibility to its owners. Such privileges should be granted to corporations of other States, whose charters are independent of our control, only when the interest of the people of our State are fully secured. Therefore, recommend that a clause be inserted in the Constitution in substance as follows:

"The Legislature shall provide that foreign corporations shall secure the performance of obligations created in this State."

Albany, Aug. 2, 1867.

We concur as to the first and second propositions embraced in this report, but without indorsing all the reasons stated therein.

HOBART KRUM,
C. V. R. LUDINGTON.

Mr. LUDINGTON—Not being present this morning at the meeting of the committee, I had not the opportunity of signing the minority report, in which I most heartily concur. I desire leave to sign it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman has that leave without requesting it at the hands of the Convention.

[Mr. Ludington then signed the report as above.]

Mr. VEEDER—On behalf of the majority of the Committee on Banking, Currency and Insurance, I beg leave to submit the following further report:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Currency, Banking and Insurance, dissent from so much of the joint report of said committees as relates to section six of said report, and respectfully report the following section as section six.

SECTION 6. "The stockholders in every corporation and joint stock association for banking purposes, issuing bank notes or any kind of paper credits to circulate as money, shall be individually liable to the amount of their respective share or

TRACY BEADLE,
BENJ. N. HUNTINGTON,
WILLIAM D. VEEDER,
JOHN EDDY,
WM. HITCHMAN.

Mr. LANDON gave notice that he would at a future day ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the previous question may be applied to the particular sections of an article or other question under consideration, without including the whole article or main question.

Which was laid on the table under the rule.

Mr. GERRY—I call up for consideration the resolution offered by me, in reference to a report of the common council of New York.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the clerk of the common council of the city of New York be and he is hereby requested to furnish this Convention with copies of the report of a select committee of such common council heretofore appointed to inquire and report what rights and franchises now belong to said city, and of what rights and franchises said city has been deprived by legislative interference or otherwise.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I move that that resolution be referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. GERRY—My object in offering the resolution was for the purpose of procuring the information, as well for the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature as for the Convention at large, from an elaborate report, which I understand has been recently made at the instance of the common council of New York city, in reference to the rights formerly vested in said city and the franchises which belong to her, properly speaking. By a reference of this resolution to the committee indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], it will practically become a nullity; if passed, the clerk of the common council, pursuant to its terms, will be requested to furnish the information. As my object was to procure the information, I submit the proper course would be to pass the resolution. Then the clerk will make a return, and it will properly come before the committee indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins].

Mr. HUTCHINS—If the gentleman will modify his resolution requesting the clerk of the common council to forward to this Convention a report made by individuals, naming them, I should have no objection to vote for it; but that resolution assumes certain facts which may or may not exist. It assumes that certain franchises, rights and privileges, have been taken away from the city of New York, and the Convention, by passing it, may pass upon that question. If the gentleman merely wants a report here and offers a resolution calling for that report, I shall most cheerfully vote for it, but I think the present resolution contemplates a little more than calling for information.

Mr. HITCHMAN—I have no objection that the resolution of my friend should be modified in that

§ 3. The term corporation, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the privileges and powers of corporations not possessed by partnerships or individuals. And all corporations shall have the right to sue and shall be subject to be sued in all courts in like cases as natural persons.

§ 4. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any law sanctioning in any manner, directly or indirectly, the suspension of specie payments by any person or corporation.

§ 5. The Legislature shall provide by law for the registry of all bills or notes issued or put in circulation as money, and shall require ample security for the redemption of the same in specie.

§ 6. The stockholders in every corporation shall be individually liable to the amount of their respective share or shares of stock in any such corporation, for all its debts and liabilities.

HORATIO BALLARD,
Chairman.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole and ordered to be printed.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL, from the same committee, submitted a minority report.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The undersigned cannot agree with the majority of the Joint Committee on Corporations in so changing the present Constitution as to inhibit the Legislature from creating corporations or amending the charters, if any, by special acts.

It is urged by those who support this measure that the creation and amendment of special charters are prolific causes for legislation, that they beget corruption, and that general laws should alone provide for the different classes.

In answering this position, I assume that after safeguards shall have been placed around future Legislatures, by this Convention, to insure their purity, and provision is made for decent payment of legislators, honest and capable men will be elected, and should it be otherwise the people will prove to be as bad as their representatives. In that event all the work of this Convention will be in vain, for positive law cannot revivify the waning virtue of a State.

Confident in this assumption, I believe our future legislators will be unassailable by corruption.

And though applications to our Legislature for special charters, and amendments to charters, are very numerous, yet that only proves that ours is a great State, and the requirements of its commerce and business numerous. Smaller States do not have the same needs.

And though such matters occupy a great deal of the time of our legislators, yet that is what we elect them for. They are sent to hear the wants of the people, to receive and consider their applications, and if proper, to grant them. Are we willing to adopt the principle that our future legislative body cannot be trusted with such details?

Provision by law exists for advertising the proposed application for a special charter or amendment. This ought to be sufficient to give publicity to the proposition, and excite opposition, if there should be any.

General laws cannot provide for the special needs of different classes of corporations. Do persons interested desire to build a railroad from an ore bed and lay a wooden rail covered with iron? The general railroad law says the rail must weigh fifty-six pounds to the lineal yard.

Does a ferry company wish the sole privilege of ferriage for a portion of a river in order to render the enterprise sufficiently profitable to warrant the undertaking? It would be impossible to make a general rule which would apply with the same beneficial results to a sparsely as to a densely settled district giving the same monopoly, as to distance, to each.

But it is useless to multiply illustrations. It would be impossible to foresee the special necessities which might arise in different cases. Therefore intrust it to the Legislature which sits oftener than once in twenty years and can thus mould legislation to varying needs.

I, therefore, respectfully submit, that it is best to retain the section of the existing Constitution on this subject.

Neither have I been able to agree with the committee in requiring individual liability for the payment of the debts of all corporations, on the part of stockholders, to an amount equal to the amount of their stock.

Since the formation of the State the experience and wisdom of its Legislatures have directed that the stockholders in some corporations should be personally liable, and in others, not. Some are formed for purely business and money making purposes—others for scientific—and still others for purely benevolent uses. Some, as many rail and plank-road companies, are anticipated failures as moneyed speculations, and the incorporators subscribe, never expecting to see their money again, but are content with the general good attained by the performance of the objects of their creation. It is a well known fact that the pioneers in such enterprises lose their investments while their successors reap the profits. Under the present laws in incorporated academies and other institutions of learning, the incorporators incur no personal liability. In manufacturing, mining, mechanical, chemical, railroad and gas-light companies, they are liable only till the capital stock is paid in, except as regards laborers and servants of the company. In bridge companies the directors are responsible if debts are contracted beyond the amount of the capital stock. In insurance companies the corporators are liable only till the stock is paid in, while the law fixes upon the members of telegraph companies a personal responsibility equal to 25 per cent more than the amount of their stock.

Thus the experience of the past has demonstrated that distinction should be made between diverse classes of corporations in charging upon the members a personal liability for obligations. It seems proper to heed its teachings.

In order to carry out the very object of the creation of banking and other moneyed corporations, it is necessary to establish proper confidence in their ability to meet pecuniary obligations. Hence the necessity to insure such ability by stringent laws. But the same requirements do not exist with other associations. Therefore I would leave the Legislature to say what laws upon this subject should apply to each particular class, and hence prefer to retain the section of the present Constitution applicable to this topic.

It is further submitted that a clause should be incorporated into the Constitution providing that foreign corporations doing business in this State should deposit security here for the punctual performance of their obligations, leaving the Legislature to prescribe the details. The present laws require this of insurance companies.

There are a host of mining, mechanical and other corporations, the creatures of other States and countries, many of them almost myths, with no pecuniary responsibility, which find it convenient, after doing business and contracting obligations here, to retire, "and like the unsubstantial pageant of a dream, leaving no trace behind." It seems as though the corporations of our State were sufficient for the wants of our people, and if others are permitted to enjoy privileges here, let them protect our citizens in their dealings.

The object of incorporations is to combine the associated action of many, as one artificial person with exemption from personal responsibility to its members. Such privileges should be granted to the creations of other States, whose charters are independent of our control, only when the interests of the people of our State are fully secured. I, therefore, recommend that a clause be inserted in the Constitution in substance as follows:

"The Legislature shall provide that foreign corporations shall secure the performance of obligations created in this State."

LESLIE W. RUSSELL.

Albany, Aug. 2, 1867.

We concur as to the first and second propositions embraced in this report, but without indorsing all the reasons stated therein.

HOBERT KRUM,
C. V. R. LUDINGTON.

Mr. LUDINGTON—Not being present this morning at the meeting of the committee, I had not the opportunity of signing the minority report, in which I most heartily concur. I desire leave to sign it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman has that leave without requesting it at the hands of the Convention.

[Mr. Ludington then signed the report as above.]

Mr. VEEDER—On behalf of the majority of the Committee on Banking, Currency and Insurance, I beg leave to submit the following further report:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Currency, Banking and Insurance, dissent from so much of the joint report of said committees as relates to section six of said report, and respectfully report the following section as section six.

SECTION 6. "The stockholders in every corporation and joint stock association for banking purposes, issuing bank notes or any kind of paper credits to circulate as money, shall be individually liable to the amount of their respective share or

TRACY BEADLE,
BENJ. N. HUNTINGTON,
WILLIAM D. VEEDER,
JOHN EDDY,
WM. HITCHMAN.

Mr. LANDON gave notice that he would at a future day ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the previous question may be applied to the particular sections of an article or other question under consideration, without including the whole article or main question.

Which was laid on the table under the rule.

Mr. GERRY—I call up for consideration the resolution offered by me, in reference to a report of the common council of New York.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the clerk of the common council of the city of New York be and he is hereby requested to furnish this Convention with copies of the report of a select committee of such common council heretofore appointed to inquire and report what rights and franchises now belong to said city, and of what rights and franchises said city has been deprived by legislative interference or otherwise.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I move that that resolution be referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. GERRY—My object in offering the resolution was for the purpose of procuring the information, as well for the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature as for the Convention at large, from an elaborate report, which I understand has been recently made at the instance of the common council of New York city, in reference to the rights formerly vested in said city and the franchises which belong to her, properly speaking. By a reference of this resolution to the committee indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], it will practically become a nullity; if passed, the clerk of the common council, pursuant to its terms, will be requested to furnish the information. As my object was to procure the information, I submit the proper course would be to pass the resolution. Then the clerk will make a return, and it will properly come before the committee indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins].

Mr. HUTCHINS—If the gentleman will modify his resolution requesting the clerk of the common council to forward to this Convention a report made by individuals, naming them, I should have no objection to vote for it; but that resolution assumes certain facts which may or may not exist. It assumes that certain franchises, rights and privileges, have been taken away from the city of New York, and the Convention, by passing it, may pass upon that question. If the gentleman merely wants a report here and offers a resolution calling for that report, I shall most cheerfully vote for it, but I think the present resolution contemplates a little more than calling for information.

Mr. HITCHMAN—I have no objection that the resolution of my friend should be modified in that way, but to say that this Convention is called upon to pass upon certain questions of which we have no knowledge, is to say, what in my judgment, is wrong; that the city of New York has not been deprived of her rights, and has not been deprived of powers and duties and privileges which belong to her people to exercise, is to say what is untrue. This Convention and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], knows very well—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. HITCHMAN—I am simply replying to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins].

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair did not understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins] to make any such assertions.

Mr. GERRY—I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hutchins], who has opposed my resolution, is in error in relation to its terms. It certainly was not my object, in framing its language, to commit this Convention to any statement whatever. I endeavored to make it as specific as possible, in order to inform the officer to whom, by its terms, it is to be sent, of the information we require, and I endeavored to comply with the language of the resolution as near as I could, which was offered by one of the members of the common council, pursuant to which the committee in question was appointed. That committee was appointed some time since; they were desired and requested to procure all the information in their power, and, as I am informed, they have collected a mass of material which will throw considerable light upon the labors of this Convention when they come to discuss in Committee of the Whole the report of the Committee on Cities hereafter to be presented. I think if the resolution be read again, as I ask that it may be for the information of the Convention, it will be found that there is nothing whatever contained in its language or terms either committing this Convention to the subject of the information requested, or desiring anything more than specific information on the subject that has been brought up before the common council in question. I submit, therefore, with great confidence that the resolution is perfectly proper, both in language and tenor, and I ask that it be passed.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "franchises," "if any," and I withdraw the original motion to refer.

Mr. GERRY—I have no objection to accepting the amendment, although I want it distinctly understood that I do not regard it as at all necessary. It is a somewhat novel principle that the city of New York has not some rights.

The question was then put on the resolution as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. PRINDLE—I desire to call up the resolution offered by me yesterday in regard to the extension of the Chenango canal.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the State Engineer and Surveyor be requested to furnish information to the Convention of the state of the work on the extension of the Chenango canal to the State line of Pennsylvania, the proportion of work already done, and the probable expense, in addition to the amount already appropriated, of completing said extension.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Prindle, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. BARKER—I offer the following resolution: The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the several standing committees appointed by this Convention be requested to make their final reports on or before the 9th inst.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Barker, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. LUDINGTON—I offer the following preamble and resolution:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

WHEREAS, Schemes and devices for selling property and raising money through the sale of tickets or chances in what is commonly called "gift enterprises" have become common in our State, and of alarming interest to the people, and which, while they lack the odium and legal disability attaching to offenses known under the laws against gaming and lotteries, are nevertheless equally fruitful of evil and dangerous to public morals; and

WHEREAS, Such schemes and devices as conducted are of doubtful legislative control; therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature be requested to report a Constitutional provision by which such practices may be prohibited by law.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Ludington, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. STRATTON—I call for the consideration of the resolution offered by me yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of metropolitan police of the city of New York, be requested to report to this Convention, as soon as practicable, the number of men detailed from the metropolitan police force as attendants upon each of the police courts, the courts of general and special sessions, and any other courts in the city of New York, during the year 1866, designating the name of each of said courts, and the amounts paid for such attendance upon each of said courts respectively; and also whether the amounts so paid will be increased or diminished for the year 1867, and if so, how much for each of said courts.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Stratton, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. CLINTON—I offer the following resolution and ask that it be laid on the table:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Convention, it is the duty of the United States of America to refund the moneys and assume the debts expended and incurred by the loyal States in aiding Congress to raise and support for "the common defense" during the late rebellion, those armies which, with the blessing of Almighty God, preserved the "more perfect Union," and secured "the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, authensense of this Convention as to the propriety of double or single senate districts, I offer the following resolution:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the consideration of the report of the committee "on the Legislature, etc.," and that the same be re-committed to said committee, with instructions to so amend said report as to provide for thirty-three single senate districts, and that said committee report such districts.

Mr. SPENCER—I offer the following resolution as a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Seneca [Mr. Hadley].

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole be discharged for the present from the further consideration of section second of the report of the Committee on the organization of the Legislature, and that the same be referred back to said last-named Committee, with instructions to report a section with provisions in substance that the Senate shall consist of Senators chosen from the same number of senatorial districts, to be numbered from one to thirty-six inclusive, for the term of four years, so that the terms of one-fourth of said Senators shall expire in each year. The whole number of Senators shall be chosen at the election first held under this Constitution, and shall be divided into four classes of one-fourth of said Senators in each class, the terms of whose office shall be respectively one, two, three and four years, and which classes shall be so arranged that Senators of each class shall be distributed equally as nearly as may be through the State; and also to provide either for the division of the State into senatorial districts, or for such division by the Legislature as to said Committee shall seem proper.

Mr. SPENCER—My object in offering this substitute was to test, not only the question of single senatorial districts, but also the term of office, and the question can be taken separately upon these two propositions. The resolution was drawn with the view of being offered in Committee of the Whole, and contains some words which are not perhaps proper to be offered here. Gentlemen will understand the object of the proposition.

Mr. BARKER—I wish the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer] would withdraw his substitute. The gentleman from Seneca [Mr. Hadley], as I understand it, has introduced his resolution for the purpose of testing the sense of this Convention, whether we will adhere to the single senate district or not, if it is decided that we shall, then we shall go into detail. If it shall be decided that we abandon it then we may arrange the large districts. If we get at the principle on which we are to elect, the Senate is established, the balance is detail. I apprehend it will facilitate our deliberations very much to have this question settled.

Mr. RATHBUN—I do not believe it is worth while to stop in the discussion of the report of that committee for the purpose of taking up either of these propositions. I submit to the gentlemen of the Convention that the discussion of these very questions, and all of them, is really necessary. I am very confident that a great many members of this Convention have not decided fully as to the manner this thing shall be arranged. I know my first impression would be in favor of large districts. I know there are inconveniences and difficulties, but I do not know the extent of those inconveniences or difficulties. I desire that the members of the Convention shall show us, in the course of the discussion, in what particular the large districts are to be considered objectionable. Again, the question of single districts will necessarily be involved in this discussion, and so would the "double district," as it might be called. Now, I desire to hear a full and fair discussion of this question in connection with the report of that committee. I believe it is best, for I do not believe that any member of the Convention is now ready to take any one of these propositions by itself and determine definitely and properly how it shall be disposed of. I rose with a view to make a motion that the whole subject be referred to the Committee of the Whole, and be considered in Committee of the Whole. It seems to me it is the only place in which anything can be done properly and the entire thing be discussed together. Members of the Convention will see that all these questions are intermixed and intermingled in such a manner that they ought to be discussed in connection. You take the city of New York; the proposition is to give the city five or six Senators; I believe there is a proposition to make an addition so as to entitle it to six. Now, that would seem to dispose of all difficulty in regard to the city of New York. In regard to Kings county in the second district, the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] proposes to strike out Westchester; that would remove all difficulty there by reducing that district. But when all difficulties with regard to cities are removed, then comes the other question in regard to the districting of the State upon the system of four or eight districts, and I want to hear that question discussed before it is abandoned. My recollections of the condition of things from 1821 to 1846 were that the Senate was then regarded as entirely different from what it has been under the single district system. It has lost, in a great measure, its character as a higher and more conservative body than the Assembly, mainly upon the ground that it is brought so completely in contact with the assembly districts that it is difficult to mark the line of distinction between Senators and Assemblymen. And in order to have it a conservative body to check and control the hasty and inconsiderate legislation on the part of the Assembly, it is, in my judgment, highly necessary that we should resort to another rule than that of the single district. How far we should go I do not say, but I desire to hear this discussed. I know there are a large number of members in this Convention who desire to hear arguments which may be offered, pro and con, on these subjects, in order to make up their minds. I submit the motion I arose to make, that this whole subject be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will state that the refusal to entertain these propositions must necessarily have that result; therefore it is not necessary to make such a reference.

Mr. PRINDLE — I rise to suggest that I trust this matter will not be taken away at the present time from the Committee of the Whole. I am aware we have already spent more time in Committee of the Whole than we should have spent upon the report of the Committee on Suffrage. But it seems to me there is danger of running to the opposite extreme. It seems to me we ought to have the privilege of deliberating upon this question fully and fairly to a reasonable extent in Committee of the Whole. I desire, for one, to say something in Committee of the Whole upon this subject. And I believe there are many other gentlemen here who wish to express their views, and give reasons for votes which may be given, in Committee of the Whole when the whole subject is under consideration, where we shall not be limited to such a narrow compass as in the Convention. It certainly cannot do much harm to discuss this subject a little further, a day or two—one day at least, in Committee of the Whole, where the speeches are confined to twenty minutes.

Mr. COMSTOCK — I move that the resolution for the present lay on the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Comstock and declared carried.

Mr. ANDREWS — Before going into Committee of the Whole I desire to ask leave of absence for myself for to-morrow. I have an engagement that I cannot well disregard.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. E. BROOKS — I would like to ask the same for myself until Monday evening.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. VEEDER — I desire to ask leave of absence for myself from Saturday until Monday. I am obliged to go to my court on Monday.

There being no objection leave was granted.

Mr. HITCHMAN — I ask leave of absence for myself for to-morrow and Monday.

Mr. GREELEY — I object. We are in danger of being left without a quorum. I object to any more leaves of absence being granted.

The question was then put on granting Mr. Hitchman leave of absence, and it was declared carried.

Mr. FULLERTON — I ask leave of absence for myself.

Mr. GREELEY — I object.

Mr. BARKER — I ask the gentleman to state his reasons for asking leave of absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair cannot compel the gentleman to give a reason.

Mr. FULLERTON — I have important business which will occupy my time to-morrow and on Monday at home.

The question was then put on granting Mr. Fullerton leave of absence and it was declared carried.

Mr. BERGEN — I ask to be excused until Tuesday morning. My reason is sickness in my family.

Mr. GREELEY — I object.

The question was then put on granting Mr. Bergen leave of absence and it was declared carried.

Mr. LOEW — I ask leave of absence for myself for to-morrow and Monday on the ground that I must hold court on those two days, and I have no other justice to hold court for me, as I have made no arrangement for those days.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — If it is in order I desire to ask how many are excused.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair understands from the Secretary, that seventeen have been excused by the action of this morning.

Mr. HATCH — I desire to ask to be excused.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair would inform the gentleman that there is still a proposition before the Convention, in the case of Mr. Loew, which has not been acted upon.

Mr. KINNEY — Will the Secretary give us the number who have been excused before, and whose excuses still continue.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair will endeavor to procure the information through the Secretary.

Mr. CLINTON — It may be proper for me to state that having been excused until Monday, I nevertheless will be here on Saturday. I find it is not necessary to be absent.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE — If it is in order I would like to have the roll called, so as to know how many will be present after deducting those who are excused.

The question was put on the motion to call the roll and declared lost, on a division; by a vote of 63 to 50.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair will answer with reference to the last question asked of the Secretary, that in addition to the seventeen gentlemen who have been excused, three others have been excused, making twenty in all.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Loew and it was declared carried.

Mr. DUGANNE — I desire to ask of the Convention permission to withdraw from the committee to which it has been referred, the memorial containing the name of John A. King, for the reason I have just received a letter communicating to me the fact that the promise has been made to return that signature to the family because it was the last signature which Mr. King made before his death.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion at present that under the rule which has obtained in the legislative bodies in this State, and I believe it is settled by enactment that no such request can be granted by the Convention. As at present advised the Chair must rule, therefore, that the request cannot be granted.

Mr. DUGANNE — Can I refer the request, and upon a full report of the committee have the report returned?

Mr. WEED — If the President pro tem. would allow me I would state that there is no statute that can apply to this body on such a question. Our rules do not prevent the return of a paper or the withdrawing of papers from the files of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — With the consent of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Duganne], the Chair will hold the question in abeyance.

Mr. HATCH — I desire to be excused until next Tuesday, for the reason of sickness in my family. The question was then put on granting Mr.

Hatch leaves of absence and was declared carried.

The Convention then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole upon the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc. Mr. ARCHER, of Wayne, in the chair.

The Chairman announced the pending question to be on the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard].

Mr. HATCH—I ask whether this amendment is a substitute for the section.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair understands the proposition of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] is a substitute for the sections in the report relating to the districts in the State.

Mr. HATCH—It is for thirty-two districts as I understand it—

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I believe, Mr. Chairman, I had the floor last night—

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair recognized the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch] first, supposing the gentleman wished merely to ask a question, then it recognized the gentleman from Lewis [Mr. E. A. Brown], but ascertaining that the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch] desires to address the committee, awards him the floor.

Mr. HATCH—I desire to say, sir, that I approve of the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard]. It is to substitute the old system of thirty-two districts for eight large senatorial districts, as now proposed by the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature. I fail to appreciate any of the arguments that have been introduced here by the chairman of the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature, in favor of changing our present system. There has been no complaint from the people against the present system. They ask no change. I don't believe in trying experiments on making Constitutions. Let well enough alone, is an old proverb. The gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. J. Townsend] expressed, in the main, my views so fully, and gave reasons against the propositions which were before this committee, that I will not attempt to add to them, as I believe in letting well enough alone, in letting a well tried system in the State alone. I consider the tendency of this new representative scheme, the centralization of political power in parties, and that is as objectionable as a centralization of power in the State or nation. It is removing political power from the people. The democratic theory of government is to keep it near the people. I am opposed to all the propositions presented before this committee, except the one amendment proposed by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard]. I should add, however, that the proposition made by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] can be shown to be a practical proposition, embodying the principles of minority representation. I can say, sir, that proposition will receive my cordial support. A plan that would secure representatives in the Legislature from minorities as well as majorities is democratic. It seems to me, sir, that those who believe in popular representation and popular supremacy should sustain it if it is practical. It is antagonistic to the proposition of the larger district representation recommended by the committee. It is a step in the right direction, giving or rather leaving power with the people, where it belongs. The proposition of the committee, as I have before said, is centralizing—this of minority representation is decentralizing political power. It is in harmony with the spirit and substance of the Constitution of 1846, that the only true depository of power was in the people. I believe in the principle of self-government. I believe in the instinct of the masses—the common understanding of the people when fairly expressed to be the best governmental action. For these reasons I oppose the report of the committee.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to make an elaborate argument on this question. As I understand the amendment proposed by the honorable gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], it is to retain, by an article in the amended Constitution, the present number of thirty-two Senators and the present districts as now organized. In relation to the number of Senators, I desire to say, that, so far as the State at large is concerned, in my judgment the present representation of Senators is not too large and is satisfactory except as to the city of New York and the immediate vicinity, where the population increases faster than it does in other portions of the State. In order to preserve what I consider a proper representation in the other parts of the State, I am decidedly in favor of a small increase of Senators to keep up with that increase of population, so that there may not be the complaint which has been made upon this floor on the part of the great city of New York, that its great interests, its teeming and growing population, and its immense wealth, and importance, are not sufficiently cared for, in the number of representatives in the Senate accorded to that locality. And, sir, I do not think the addition of one Senator is enough to meet this want; two or three at least should be provided for, in my judgment in addition to the present number, to meet the just requirements of those great interests—that growing population and rapidly increasing business. But, sir, the proposition to change from the single district system to a system of eight districts, I decidedly oppose. It is said that the larger the constituency the better the representatives. I deny that that proposition is proved, either by any sound argument or by any practical experience in this State. It is alleged that there is corruption in the legislative body. That, sir, is a charge very easily made, and if it were true, I deny that the proposed change from single districts to large districts affords any sort of remedy. Now, sir, on the subject of purity of the Senate, it has not happened, so far as I have heard, within the last twenty years, that any two members or any one member has been called upon to resign his seat to avoid expulsion for corrupt practices in the office of Senator. Two such instances occurred under the old system, and in two different districts in this State—one having been declared by the Senate guilty of moral and official misconduct was not expelled by a vote of the Senate, but was permitted to resign. Now, sir, what is it that keeps men honest in official bodies? When people select a man for Senator they do not select a dishonest man fore it is not necessary to make such a reference.

Mr. PRINDLE—I rise to suggest that I trust this matter will not be taken away at the present time from the Committee of the Whole. I am aware we have already spent more time in Committee of the Whole than we should have spent upon the report of the Committee on Suffrage. But it seems to me there is danger of running to the opposite extreme. Mr. HATCH—I desire to be excused until next Tuesday, for the reason of sickness in my family.

The question was then put on granting Mr.

subject. And, sir, I think that the arguments that have been offered in support of this proposition, to go back to the system of large districts, is not supported by any practical experience, or by any sound reason. But the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] says we must have experience. True, we want experience in the Senate, and how do we get it? Well, the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] says there is a class of men, graduates from the board of supervisors. Why, sir, that is not a bad school to teach men how to act as Senators. He says we have a class who graduate from the Assembly. Neither is that a bad school. Some men come into the Senate who have not had any experience, and before they passed through their two years, many of them have demonstrated themselves to be the ablest and best men in the Senate, and if they are found to be competent and faithful, in the discharge of their duties, they are again returned, and thus the next Senate has the benefit of their experience and their industry and their capacity. When is it that the Senator is most diligent in the discharge of his duties—when is it that he gives most attention to his business and seeks most faithfully to discharge those duties at all times? Why, sir, it is the very first session he attends; and if he becomes careless and worthless at any time, it is after he has filled that position for a season, got rid of his industrious habits, and become careless as to the interests of his constituents and of his own reputation; and his experience in that case is of no particular value. I say, if the Senator proves himself able, competent, efficient and trustworthy, he will be returned to the Senate, and the Chair must have in his mind's eye this moment, several in the present Senate, and those who have recently left it, who have been elected and re-elected, and the third time elected from these single districts. And we have those who have graduated from the Senate and been elected Governors of the State—two of them—who were elected to the Senate from single districts, and one of them has been promoted to a still higher sphere, to a seat in the Senate of the United States. Sir, if the people themselves are to be represented in their State Legislature, in their Senate, give them the opportunity, each one hundred thousand of them in their single districts, to designate a man to watch over their interests, and to take care of them, and they will sustain him if he deserves to be sustained—those who know him and feel a personal interest in him will support and encourage and sustain him, if he proves himself worthy of encouragement and support, but if he is found to be incompetent, unfaithful or dishonest, his immediate constituency, in the single district, will ascertain those facts and dispose of him as quietly as possible at the expiration of his term. I am decidedly in favor of retaining the single district system, and making such addition to the number of Senators as will be sufficient to accomplish the purposes specified at the commencement of my remarks. Now, the gentleman [Mr. Schoonmaker] said last evening, in reference to the representative population which was fixed under the Constitution of 1846, that it included aliens who were taxed; the exclusion being, as he represented, “aliens not taxed and persons of color not taxed,” and that the punctuation of the article in question bore him out in that interpretation. On being asked if he noticed the comma after the words “excluding aliens,” and before the words “and persons of color not taxed,” he replied that there was no comma there. I do not propose to make an argument as to the interpretation of the Constitution of 1846 (Article 3, section 4) on that subject. It is too clear to be for one moment questioned. But I hold in my hand an official copy of that Constitution, published in 1849, by order of the Legislature, in which the comma does follow the words “excluding aliens,” and precedes the words “and persons of color not taxed,” which clearly proves the understanding of the Convention of 1846, and that no change was made or contemplated by the committee whose report is now under consideration, as to aliens being considered a part of the representative population of the State.

Mr. BOWEN—As at present advised, I am strongly inclined to favor the report of the Standing Committee so far as it divides the State into eight Senate districts, and the considerations in favor of such division have been so fully and so ably set forth by the honorable gentleman from Chautauqua that I do not feel at liberty to occupy the time of the committee by adding anything, and shall content myself in attempting to vindicate the report by noticing some of the objections thereto urged upon this floor. It has been urged that a partisan political advantage was intended, and will result from an adoption of such division. The intention of the committee is, in reality, of no consequence, because, if their report, in the respect under consideration, be right, and will, in its operation, tend to advance the moral and material interests of the people, and the whole people of the State, then it should be adopted, whatever may have been the intentions of the individual members of the committee. But the members of that committee disclaim any such intention, and I am bound to believe them. Whether the adoption of the division recommended will result in an advantage to either political party I have not inquired, and shall not inquire. It is enough for me that the public interests will be thereby promoted, and if, in consequence thereof, the political party to which I am attached shall sink into a hopeless minority, let it sink. It may not be out of place here to suggest that the Constitution recommended by us, if adopted by the people, may, and probably will, outlive the rise and fall of more than one political party; and is it not a question worthy of consideration, whether, in consideration of the fact that the result of our labors is intended to outlive party issues, we are not lowering the position we occupy by allowing party politics, which are ephemeral and for the day, to enter into our deliberations? But it is objected that where the district is large, the elector, residing remote from the one voted for, may not know the fitness and qualifications of the candidate—and on the other hand that the candidate, if elected, may not be acquainted with the requirements of his remote constituency. But will not the same objection apply to the election of our Governors and State officers who must knowingly. If he is found to be dishonest in office, this dishonesty is developed in consequence of the circumstances by which he is surrounded, the position he has held, and the temptation to which he has been exposed, and the longer he holds that position and the longer he is exposed to those temptations the greater is the liability for corruption; and the oftener he is called home to his constituents, to give account of his acts as a Senator, the more likely is he to retain the honesty he brought here into the Senate with him, and to preserve the good character he has borne among his constituents, and by which he was enabled to secure so honorable and important a position. Sir, there is no difficulty, in the hundred thousand and more people who comprise a single senate district in designating some one man among their number competent and able and honorable enough to discharge the duties of the office of Senator. It is not necessary to link the county of Albany, with its great interests and its connections with the corporation of the Central railroad and other corporations, with the great agricultural county, St. Lawrence, in order to find a man competent to represent St. Lawrence in the Senate. It is not necessary for the county of St. Lawrence, or other agricultural districts of the State, to come to the county of Albany to get advice as to whom they shall send to the Senate, nor is it necessary to go from here to those districts to get advice. No, sir, there is not a town in that county (St. Lawrence) but that is able to furnish a competent man to represent that district—whether a single district, or a double district, or a quadruple district, in the State Senate. Ability, experience, competency, integrity, are not so scarce in this country that you need to link together six, or eight, or ten or twelve counties to find four men who are fit and competent to represent any locality in the Senate of the State. But, sir, if the argument is sound, if the larger the constituency the better the Senator you get, why not say four districts instead of eight, two instead of four, or the whole State in one district, because, sir, the larger you make the constituency the greater you make the Senator—that is the argument. Sir, in a single Senate district the political conventions or nominating assemblies are numerous compared with those which meet in large districts; they have a delegate, perhaps, from every town, several from every county; large conventions are got together, representing every portion of the district, and they consult together and nominate a man for Senator. But it is said that small politicians in a small way can secure nominations in a small district. Sir, that argument proves altogether too much. You are necessarily compelled to rely upon the people for your candidate for Senator, and if the people in particular neighborhoods associate together, a hundred thousand people and more in one district, by their delegates and their representatives assembled in convention, are not honest enough and competent to furnish you a suitable man as a candidate for Senator, I would like to know what has become of our theory of representative government? What is it good for? Upon whom do you rely? Upon whom do you fall back to regenerate your Senate if it becomes corrupt? Why, it is the people, and if you cannot rely upon their honesty and integrity, upon their judgment and discernment, upon whom can you rely to maintain your system of representative government, and to supply your Senate with proper and competent and honest members? That rule, that necessity, applies to every nomination, to every office. But, sir, take the large district system for one moment; take this very district as proposed by your honorable committee which includes St. Lawrence and Albany. They will send a few members from the county of Albany to the nominating convention, and those members can very easily find their way into such a convention through the agency of the political machinery that exists here; they go there, a few of them, more likely to be politicians by trade than those who come together for the same purpose in the single districts (in which a larger proportionate number of delegates generally assemble), and I ask who selects the candidate for Senator to be located in the county of Albany? Why, the delegate or delegates that go from the county of Albany, St. Lawrence does not interfere with it. There would not be one case in a thousand where the delegation from one county would seek to interfere with the delegation from another, as to the man who should represent that portion of the district in which a candidate was to be located. So that in fact delegates from a particular county or locality would nominate their own man, and when thus nominated he would be voted for by the electors of the whole district, they knowing nothing and caring nothing for him, except that he is a member of the party, and for that reason must be voted for. While on the other hand, in a small district, under our single district system, the constituency knows the candidate. I vote for a man because I know him, and take some interest in him, and, sir, it is desirable above all things, that the greatest inducements should be held out to get intelligent and honest voters, and all voters, to come to the polls at the time of election. Personal acquaintance with worthy candidates has that tendency. I insist that the single district system has worked well. Now, there is a class of men in every community, in every county in the State, in every locality, in every district, whose circumstances and whose business arrangements and employments are inconsistent with their taking a seat in the Senate; therefore they do not desire to become candidates for the Senate; there is another class, perhaps not more ambitious, whose circumstances, business, and arrangements and position, are such that they can become candidates and members of the Senate, and, sir, in this class, are men of intelligence and practical ability, of good sense, of sound and mature judgment, who understand our institutions, and are fully competent to discharge the duties of that high office; and, sir, the people will always select the best men who are available for those positions, and they would do so in small districts as well as large, when they had the opportunity to select from those of whom they had some knowledge, and they would be more likely to vote for men who are incompetent, when they are called upon to vote for men of whom they know nothing. That is my judgment upon that present evils they will increase them. The only alteration from the present system which it seems to me proper to make, will be to extend the term of office of Senators to three or four years, and arrange them by classes so as to elect one class each year. That would avoid the necessity of changing the whole body at one period, and that could be engrafted upon the present system without any great difficulty. In a two years' term it would perhaps be better to elect one-half one year and the other half the succeeding year. A change of that kind, I believe, would be beneficial. In relation to members of Assembly, as proposed by this report, I think it will be equally inconvenient. Under the present system no clique of partisans can well control or command a county composed of several districts. This is a very difficult matter. I have in my own experience seen it attempted, but it failed. Take for instance the county in which I reside, part agricultural and part commercial, part rural and part city; in the city it is very common for those who are desirous of office to be more critical and sharper than those in the country, and if you make a district of the whole county, the rural districts might never get the representative they desired, for the reason that the governing power is in the city, and of course they would exercise that power in favor of their own friends; but under the single district system the rural districts would have a representation such as they wished. Under the other system a clique might nominate every member, and, where there was a strong party majority, would elect them. I do not desire to put it in the power of any set of men to control the whole destiny of a county and the whole representation. I prefer that the power should be divided up among the people of the county and that the representatives should be brought as close to the people as possible, and that the people should know their representatives and be able personally to judge of their qualifications, of their honesty and ability, instead of being obliged to take the judgment and opinions of others on the subject. If there is a stream of corruption, Mr. Chairman, as has been said, in this country, it must be corrupt at its source. If the body of the people are corrupt their representatives are corrupt, and you must correct it at its source, and unless it is corrected there it will be impossible to prevent corruption. The source must be pure. It may be, sir, that the people are more corrupt than in former days. That must be so if all we hear about corruption in our public men and in our legislative bodies be true. But, sir, I think that the adoption of this proposed system of large districts is not the best remedy for the evil.

Mr. SKYMOUR—Mr. Chairman, we have two propositions presented to us upon this very important question. One is that of the committee, recommending large districts for Senators; and the other, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Cordland [Mr. Ballard] recommending small districts. For myself I believe in the theory of a large district, and I shall be very happy to sustain the report of the committee, provided those districts shall show, when they come to be presented for the final action of the committee, a fair and proper distribution of the power which is here to be granted—the power of representation. I believe in the theory that the large district is the better one. I am not of those who think it is necessary to have small districts in order that the candidate may be known to the constituency; I want a large district so that we may select men at large through an extensive district, who by their experience and their character, after having been tried by the people in important stations shall give us the assurance that they are the proper men to fill the high position of Senator. We cannot ever expect to raise the character of our Senate to the position which it should be, unless we have an opportunity of selecting such men. It has been said that men elected from small districts, have gone from the Senate to the gubernatorial chair. That is so. But it should be remembered that when you select a Governor you select from the whole range of this State, and it is the pride of the citizens of this State to select a man who has character, experience and statesmanship, that shall enable him to do honor to the station to which you elect him. I want something of that high character, sir, to pertain to those men who are to be elected Senators of this State. We propose districts in which there will be an average of population of from four to five hundred thousand, a population as large as some of the smaller States of this Union, and we shall, I think, thus give a chance in the representation of so large a body for the selection of our best men. It is said that they will not be known to the people, that a candidate may be presented in one part of a large district who will be an entire stranger to the citizens of another part. I do not believe that will be the result. The tendency of the proposition presented by the committee is not to produce such a result, but to constrain the party who presents the candidate, to name a man so well known and experienced, so high in character that the people of that district may know him, know him as a public man, know him as a man suitable and proper to fill this elevated position. It is claimed too, that if the large district system is adopted, the whole management of bringing forward the candidates, will be under the control of politicians, professional politicians, who have nothing to do but to hold caucuses and select candidates for the rest of the people. I have to say in answer to that suggestion that if a political party permits that to be done they will jeopardize their ticket. I believe there is too much good sense in each of the great parties in this State to permit such a thing to be done. If you have a large district, and a candidate is selected by one party who is not known to the people, a candidate in whom they do not know that they can repose this high trust, it will be the object of the opposing party to select one who is known to the people, and a man who has commended himself to the people by his public character. Hence you will perceive, Mr. Chairman, that there will be the highest motive presented for both parties to select their best men. The time, has come, I think, to do this, and I am very glad that the committee have had the firmness to take this stand. We be chosen by the State at large? And again, since the adoption of our present Constitution, has it not been a growing evil that our Legislators have legislated altogether too much in the interest of individuals, and for or against particular localities, and for corporations purely local, in disregard of and frequently at the expense of the interests of the people at large and will not the recommendation of the committee tend, at least in some degree, to mitigate the evil if such evil exists? The gentleman from Rensselaer has very eloquently and forcibly advocated the election of Senators by single districts and if I mistake not, the most weighty reason he gives therefor, is, that under the Constitution of 1821, a Senator was expelled for corruption, while under the present Constitution nothing of the kind has taken place. May not the reason be, that under the former Constitution expulsion was the result of official corruption—while under the present Constitution that practice has, for some cause, fallen into disuse? But it is objected that the division of the State into districts as reported is unequal—that by the report some localities are favored at the expense of others. The members of the committee, however, inform us that they have made the most fair and equitable division they were able to make under the circumstances, and I am bound to believe them. If there are other members who are able to suggest one more fair and equitable, let us by all means adopt their suggestion. It is said that the division reported is based upon the census of 1866, and it is more than suggested that this census is unreliable. That census was taken by officers of the State charged with that duty, and the committee doubtless concluded that they were not at liberty to condemn it in the absence of proof of its unreliability. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], complains that the report does great injustice to his immediate constituents; that by the report, the district including the county of his residence, has not a representation equal to other localities, and to remedy the inequality he proposes what? Why, to drop from his district the county of Westchester, without attaching it to any other district. Will the gentleman pardon me if I suggest that he, as a member of this Convention, is bound equally with the members of that committee to propose the best plan that can be devised, and that in amending the report of the committee he should not have left that county without representation. If the committee had made their report as the amendment of the gentleman leaves it, they would have been derelict in duty, if not liable to censure. And is not the fact that the gentleman's amendment, as he must admit, leaves the report more objectionable than before, an implied admission that, in the respect complained of, the report is the best that could be proposed? The same distinguished gentleman further objects that the committee, while adopting the voting population as the basis of representation, have yet included in that basis the colored citizens, although as yet they are not, except in a limited degree, allowed to vote. Is not this right? As it now appears, if the result of our labors is approved, then, at the first election under the new Constitution they will be allowed to vote, and should be represented; and hence is derived, perhaps, the strongest argument against separate submission, as in case the colored citizens should enter into the basis of representation, and the franchise, on a separate submission, should not be extended to them, a wrong would be perpetrated; while on the other hand, if the basis excluded them, and the suffrage should be extended, an equal wrong will result. It can scarcely happen that any provision, if rejected on separate submission, will not mar the practical operation of the remainder. This, however, is foreign to the question now under consideration. But with regard to the details of the provision proposed, it should be borne in mind that it is but temporary in its operation; that after the enumeration provided for by the report, the Legislature can, and as we are bound to believe, will correct any and all inequalities that may be then found to exist. Like inequalities of representation always have existed, and to some extent always must exist, and we shall have performed our duty if we make those inequalities as small as is practicable. But if the Committee of the Whole shall adopt the single district system, then I shall be in favor of giving more permanency to the Senate by retaining the recommendation of the standing committee of extending the term of office of Senators to four years.

Mr. BERGEN—I desire, sir, to occupy but very little time in this debate, but I have lived under both systems, the large district and the small district system, and I have taken an active part in nominations under both systems, and been a member of senatorial conventions in a district in which there was a large majority of the party of which I was a member, under both systems, and I have seen somewhat of the workings and operations of nominations, which generally in such districts amount to an election. In my judgment I have seen nothing gained by resorting to the large district in preference to the small district system. Instead of a gain, there will be, in my judgment, a loss. We have had good men and men of ability under the single district system. Under that system, almost every voter has a personal acquaintance and knowledge of the candidates. Under the other system, with a district spread over a large territory, the voters know nothing personally of the candidates, but they are compelled to take the judgment of others without exercising their own. There are evils, no doubt, in both, and there will be evils under any system you can devise. Perfection is not to be expected, and often in trying to avoid present evils we are but flying to evils unknown. In 1846, the general complaint was against large districts, both for the Senate and the Assembly. They had then experienced the evils of the large district system, and to reform those evils they resorted to the single district system. That was twenty-one years ago, and many of the present generation and many of the members of this body have never experienced the evils of the large district system. They look back at those other days, and think that by going back to the old system, they can avoid these present evils, but in my judgment they are mistaken, and instead of avoiding the injustice corrected, either by the Convention, or by the committee who have made this report. For this purpose I have an amendment which I propose to introduce at the proper time, for the purpose of making this correction. This amendment, I think, will be fair to all localities. I strike out from the third district the county of Orange, and add to the third district the county of Albany, which may be called, as it were, the mother county of the third district, out of whose territory many of the adjacent counties have been taken—counties which for a long period of years have been associated with it. The amendment I intend to propose, reads as follows:

Amend the second section by striking out "Orange" from the counties named in the third district and "Albany" from the counties named in the fourth district, by inserting "Albany" among the counties named in the third district and "Orange" among the counties named in the sixth district; by striking out "Otsego" from the counties named in the sixth district and by inserting it among the counties named in the fourth district, so that those parts of the second section hereby amended, shall read as follows:

"The third district shall consist of the counties of Putnam, Rockland, Dutchess, Ulster, Greene, Columbia, Albany and Rensselaer.

"The sixth district shall consist of Orange, Schoharie, Delaware, Sullivan, Broome, Chenango, Madison, Cortland, Tioga, Tompkins, Chemung and Schuyler.

"The fourth district shall consist of the counties of Schenectady, Fulton, Hamilton, Saratoga, Washington, Warren, Essex, Clinton, Franklin, St. Lawrence and Otsego."

Mr. HALE—Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and now pending, presents the question of the representation of minorities, or more properly speaking, a question which has recently been attracting the attention of statesmen in representative governments throughout the world—of personal representation. I should be very glad, Mr. Chairman, if the rules of the Convention would permit a fuller discussion in this committee of this principle than can, by any possibility, be compressed into twenty minutes. It is unfortunate, I think that, by a rigid rule of this kind, in a body assembled to consider proposed changes in the fundamental law of the State—proposals, the decision of which by us may affect the welfare of the State for a whole generation to come—we should have fettered ourselves by such a limitation. But such is the rule, and it must be complied with. I will, therefore, endeavor to condense my argument as much as I can, and in the brief space allotted to me present my views as fully as may be. What is the theory of democratic republican government? It is that the people are the source of power. In a pure democracy, the people themselves make their laws; and a republic is based upon a democracy, convenience only requiring that the people should, in making laws, act through their agents and representatives, and not in person. It is obvious that in a democracy, although the voice of the majority would prevail, yet the minority would be heard, would have a vote upon the adoption or rejection of every law, and would influence legislation precisely in proportion to its numbers and character. It is equally plain, that a representative Legislature approximates the end for which it was designed, just in proportion to the completeness and exactness with which it represents the whole people—not the majority only, but all the people. No representative quorum can do this perfectly. But the nearer it comes to such perfection, the more truly is it, in fact, a government of and for the people. Now, under our present system, it is evident that this is done very imperfectly. Our people are divided into parties. Men's honest convictions lead them to prefer the principles of one party to another. It is found, practically, that in some parts of the State, one party is uniformly in a large majority, and in other portions the other party. To specify; the city of New York, the counties of Kings, Richmond, Westchester and Rockland are always democratic. St. Lawrence, Washington, Jefferson, Chautauqua, and most of the counties in the northern and western part of the State, are always republican. Republicans in the former counties, and democrats in the latter, are practically unrepresented. Republicans in Richmond and democrats in St. Lawrence have "no part or lot" in the legislation of this State. Members from their own localities do not represent them politically. Members from other parts of the State, of similar political views, do not represent their local interests. They are in fact without representation; and the misfortune is not theirs only, but the State's, for she is thus deprived of the benefit of the presence in her councils of some of her best and wisest sons. If this evil could not be remedied, we should have to accept it as one of the unavoidable evils incident to our form of government. But if it can be remedied without depriving any part of the people of any rights they now possess, and without impairing the principles of our government, and if thus a more perfect representation of the views of all the people can be brought about, we shall fail in our duty if we neglect to attempt the cure. This subject has been much discussed, especially in England and on the continent. Mr. Thomas Hare, an English lawyer of eminence, whose name is familiar as a reporter and elementary author, to my professional brethren on this floor, has devised a system for a more perfect representation, which has received the approbation of many of the wisest, most enlightened and liberal statesmen of England. The general features of his plan I will briefly state. He provides, first, for ascertaining the whole number of votes cast at any election for members of Parliament. This number, when ascertained, is to be divided by 654—the whole number of members of the House of Commons—and the quotient thus obtained, rejecting the fractional part, is the quota. Every candidate in the kingdom receiving a number of votes equal to such quota is entitled to a seat; and if then there is a deficiency, as of course there would be, the number—654—is made up from those receiving the greatest number of votes less than the quota. It will be seen that this system would lead to a waste of votes by a popular candidate receiving many more votes should endeavor to bring into the Senate of this State, this great commercial State, this State wielding such influence as it justly does in the Union, her best men. I do not wish to say anything by way of personal comparison between the Senates we have seen convened in former days under the Constitution of 1821, and those we have seen under the present Constitution. I should do those who have served under the present Constitution great injustice if I condemned them by wholesale. I have known many valuable men in the Senate under the present Constitution; gentlemen of the highest honor and integrity, and who would honor this State in any position to which they may be elected. I believe I speak the general sentiment of the people—I certainly do, so far as I have communed with them in reference to this matter which has been the subject of agitation, and consultation by the people preparatory to the meeting of this Convention—that they look back with pride to those days when the Senate was selected from large districts. That was a time when standing in the Senate chamber you could see men all around you, any one of whom you would be willing to see placed in the executive chair, or to represent this State in the Senate of the nation. I believe that we are better able now, from our increased population, our advancing intelligence and the greater experience of our public men after a lapse of over twenty years, to collect another such body, and to perpetuate it. I believe we can elect a body of whom we, without reference to party but as citizens of this great State, shall be proud. I desire to see the operations of the elective franchise in that direction; and I think if we adopt the large district system and shall so arrange our districts that there be no unfairness in their formation, we shall present on this subject a system to the people of this State which they will hail with joy. I must say, however, in passing, that I do not approve of the distribution of the power in the formation of districts in the manner the committee have presented them. I wish to say a few words upon that subject for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentlemen of the committee who reported this article and of this committee at large, to some faults which are apparent upon the face of this proposition. Sir, however meritorious the theory may be, unless you can present a proposition to the people of this State that shall be just and fair upon its face, I do not believe it will have the least chance of being adopted as a part of the Constitution. There is no subject upon which communities are so jealous as that of political power. There is no subject upon which communities, residing in the same State and having common interests, will more pertinaciously contend than the apparent unjust abstraction of political power from one locality and conferring it on another. I cannot agree with the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] in the opinion that this distribution of power should conform to the material wealth of any part of the State. I prefer to fall back upon the good old doctrine—democratic and republican, too—the doctrine of representation of the people; and whether the district be large or limited in its resources I would measure its political strength by its population.

Now, sir, a word with regard to this view of the case. It will be perceived, if we look at the plan selected by the committee as the basis of representation, that the average population for a district, taking the number of Senators as has been proposed, is 415,000, a goodly number, and one, as I before said, which any gentleman in this State, of the highest position and the greatest attainments might well feel proud to represent. But, sir, how is this power distributed by the proposition of the committee. The city of New York has assigned to it five Senators, and still has a large surplus of 55,000 and some hundreds unrepresented. That is the first district, showing a lack of representation, equal to nearly one-half of the ratio, for each Senator, that being, according to this plan, 103,000. Then we come to the second district; there we find a surplus of 48,669 not represented. Those two districts (and we may as well speak out in language so that all can understand) happen to constitute the democratic part of the State par excellence, and there is a loss of representation to that part of the State in these two districts of more than 103,000 the ratio for an entire Senator. How is it with the rest of the State? The third district has a representative population according to this programme of 381,856, which is over 33,000 short of the ratio. The third district as it stands in this proposition will undoubtedly be a republican district. I have lived in that district as long as I have lived in the State I profess to know it. I have lived in it, under both the large and the small district system, and knowing as I do, its political character as it is generally shown in elections, I think there will undoubtedly be a republican majority in it. Now, sir, I do not, and would not, stand before this committee and ask that they should frame this proposition for a political purpose for the benefit of either party. But I do insist, in all fairness, that there should not be such a gross inequality between the representation of those districts that are democratic and those that are republican. We come then to the other districts, the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth. In each of those districts there are large deficiencies in the representative population; in other words, the people in those districts, without having the ratio of 415,000 to a district, yet are allotted their full number of Senators, four to each district. If you omit the first and second districts and consider all the other districts proposed, with the exception of the fourth, they are republican, and they lack of population more than the ratio for one Senator. So that you have this most extraordinary state of things on the face of this proposition; that in the two southern districts, the first and second, which are democratic, there is a surplus population of more than 103,000, unrepresented, even allowing New York five Senators; yet in the northern and interior districts which are republican, you find they are fully represented, although they lack more than 103,000 of the ratio, for the full number of Senators apportioned to them; thus making this twofold inequality, working great injustice by refusing representation to a large surplus and by allowing it a large deficiency. Before I can support the system of large districts I desire to see this evident hands of a nominating convention. But what was the result of this plan, imperfect as it was? It has given us some of the ablest and most useful men on this floor, who could not otherwise have obtained seats here. For several of the ablest members of the Judiciary Committee, on which it is my privilege to serve, we are indebted to this system; and so to this provision, are we indebted for the presence here of the learned chairman of the Committee on the Preamble and the Bill of Rights [Mr. Evarts]; the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, who moved this amendment [Mr. Greeley]; the able chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. Church]; the honored chairman of the Committee on Cities [Mr. Harris]; the eloquent and accomplished chairman of the Committee on Education [Mr. Curtis], and many others of the ablest members of this body, whom I might name. Not one of those gentlemen could we have had to aid us in our important work had we depended on the ordinary mode of electing representatives. I am aware that it is natural for those of us who live in counties where we are in the majority, to think it is unimportant whether our friends, who are not so fortunate, are represented. The complacent language of the minority report that the force of the tyranny of majorities has not, in fact, much foundation with us, "was a very natural expression of their feeling." And it is especially true, that some of our brethren along the line of the Erie canal, considering the air in the vicinity of that charming stream as favorable to wisdom and integrity, and eminently conducive to the development and capacity for leadership, are quite willing to get along without the aid of any republicans from New York or the other counties where democrats prevail. But the people thought otherwise, and were determined to enable some people besides those of us believing we were in the majority to aid in amending the Constitution. And is there any reason why men of that same class, as representatives of their fellow citizens, who agree with their politics, should not be allowed seats in the Legislature as well as in Convention? Another objection made is, that this plan will tend to destroy and break up party organizations. I am not one of those, Mr. Chairman, who consider the existence of parties as an unmixed evil. I think we must and should have parties in a free government, and the plan proposed will not break up or destroy parties. It will tend to do away with party tyranny. It will liberate the voter from the dominion of party, and not leave him a mere machine to record the edicts of a caucus or convention. And this I consider not as an end to be feared, but "a consummation devoutly to be wished." We have been spending a good deal of time in extending the suffrage. This amendment will give it some practical value. Well, Mr. Chairman, this is an experiment. I doubt whether it is wise to try it in both houses of the Legislature. I think there should be a distinction made between Senate and Assembly. The remarks made by the gentleman from Chautauque, upon this head met my full concurrence. I am, therefore, not sure that it would be wise to adopt the amendment so far as it relates to the Senate, but I am in favor of the plan as proposed for electing members of Assembly, which will thus be made what it should be, the popular branch of the Legislature, representing the different members' opinions more fully and accurately than is possible in the Senate. I think, Mr. Chairman, that in this matter, as in all others, we shall look higher and further, than to consider the effect of an action upon present parties. Parties are temporary and their relative position uncertain and fluctuating. Principles are eternal and unchangeable. We who now consider ourselves as being in sympathy with the majority of the people of this State, may some time find ourselves in a feeble and powerless minority. The Constitution which we form, if accepted by the people, may stand for generations. Let us all endeavor so to construct it, that it will be just, fair and beneficent to all; that majorities and minorities will have their just powers and rights. Thus, and thus only, shall we be able to look back upon our labors here with satisfaction, and to feel thus all our lives that we have tried to render good service to the State and to the cause of representative government.

Mr. MERRITT—This subject was under consideration for a considerable time in the committee, and we came to the conclusion that it was not a system appropriate to our condition at the present time. The problem propounded is, in what manner the individuals constituting the entire community are to be represented, so that no class or interest shall be ignored? Mr. Hare's theory may be practical and work well in choosing the popular branch of the legislative body in a monarchical government, but not in ours. It proposes to do away with minorities, and if it should work as contemplated, there really would be none. Its adoption, then, must be urged on the ground that special industrial or other interests cannot, under our present system, be fairly represented and considered. Is that true? I believe the facts will warrant an entirely different conclusion. So far as I have knowledge on the subject, all respectful petitions and advocates have been considered and listened to with patience, and whenever the subject proved to be of sufficient importance to interest any considerable number of persons in its favor, it was sure to have advocates in the Legislature, and generally in larger proportion than it would be likely to receive under the new system, or than it would be entitled to in proportion to numbers. In this country parties are generally formed on great national questions, whose controlling influence is felt, not only in the selection of federal officers but extends to State, county and town officials, and constitutes the rallying cry in every closely contested election. The State government elected on national issues by the majority party of the State, has always been compelled by public opinion to bear the responsibilities, which have thus been sought and assumed, of caring for and guarding all the varied and important interests of the State. While we have a great diversity of interests, those of a local character have, as a general rule, been well represented in our legislative bodies. I will not say that they have been as well represented as they than the number of the quota. To provide against this (and this is the peculiar feature of Mr. Hare's system), electors are permitted to vote by "voting papers," upon which the voter can put as many names as he pleases in the order of his preference, none of these voting papers to be canceled for more than one name in the list, and that to be the lightest uncanceled name on the list; and when enough votes are appropriated to any one person to elect him, his name is to be canceled on all the papers not so appropriated. Mr. Hare's book on this subject (which is soon to be published in this country) presents the details of his plan, which my time will not permit me to give here. But in regard to it, I will quote that most eminent of writers on political economy and the principles of government, John Stuart Mill. He speaks of it in his "Considerations in a Representative Government" (page 153), "as a scheme which has the almost unparalleled merit of carrying out a great principle of government, in manner approaching to ideal perfection as regards the special object in view, while it attains incidentally several other ends of scarcely inferior importance." And again he says that "the more these works are studied, the stronger, I venture to predict, will be the impression of the perfect feasibility of the scheme and its transcendent advantages. Such and so numerous are these, that, in my conviction, they place Mr. Hare's plan among the very greatest improvements yet made in the theory and practice of government." It is my humble opinion, Mr. Chairman, that these encomiums are deserved—that Mr. Hare's system, in England, in its present form, and in the same form in our country, is feasible in practice. It was my intention to introduce an amendment applying this system, in principle, to the election of the Assembly of this State. I have concluded not to do so, however, for two reasons: first, I am convinced that neither the public mind nor the members of this Convention, have had sufficient opportunity to familiarize themselves with the novel features of this system to become reconciled to it; and secondly, because, with the little time that I have been able to bestow upon this subject, I have been, as yet, unable to find a mode for determining, in case of surplus, which of the votes cast for the successful candidate should be appropriated to him, and upon which his name should be canceled and the votes appropriated to the candidate named secondly on the voting paper. This difficulty arises solely from the system of voting by secret ballot—a system the soundness of which I greatly doubt, but which now probably stands too high in popular favor to be disturbed. Mr. Hare's plan, however, if put into operation, would more effectually accomplish the great end had in view, and insure the most perfect system of representation that has yet been devised. But passing this as now out of the question, let us come to the consideration of the plan proposed by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. This amendment embodies what is known as the cumulative system of voting, by which, each voter may cumulate his votes, giving a number of votes equal to the whole number to be elected, but with the privilege of repeating (or cumulating) his vote upon one man or any larger number less than the whole number to be elected. This system, too, originated in the old world. It has been advocated in England by Mr. Mill, an extreme liberal, and by Earl Grey, an extreme conservative. In this country it has been advocated in the Senate of the United States, as applicable to the election of Representatives in Congress. It equalizes representation less perfectly than Mr. Hare's system, but more simply and with less machinery and less novelty. I am in favor of it in principle, though not even sure but its details may be improved, as a step in the right direction, in the hope that it may ultimately lead to the adoption of something better. By it, if the proposed amendment is adopted, any party able to poll one-third of the votes in any district, is sure of being able to elect one Representative. To illustrate: suppose the whole number of voters to be 16,000, whole number of votes will be 45,000; suppose the minority is 5,000 and they cumulate on one man; he will receive three times 5,000, equal to 15,000 votes, or one-third the whole number, and must be one of the three Representatives. If the number should be five from each district, then of course one-fifth could in the same way be sure of electing one Representative. Now let us consider the objections made to them, or to any system which represents minorities. It is said to be a revolution of the principle that the majority shall rule. I deny it. The people will rule under this system, and the majority will prevail as truly as now. It will only give local minorities a chance to be heard. It is said that it will destroy local representation. My answer is that local representation will be retained just as far as is desirable. The people of the respective localities will take care of that. But the people, and not acres of land and piles of brick and mortar merely, will be represented. But it is said by some that the people do not demand any such change. Let us see. The people demand a better class of legislators and better legislation. Unless the public ear is scandalously abused, our legislators, as a class, are neither honest nor wise. The people have sent us here, among other things, to devise some way of inquiring wiser and more honest legislators and legislation. Any plan, which is likely to do this will meet their approval. This plan will do it. It will make the majority more careful whom they nominate. They will fear to nominate rogues or fools for fear of defeat by a bolt from their own party. It is said it will give the State the benefit of the services of men of talent and integrity, now kept out of public life by the accident of their residence in the district where they are in a minority. And we have evidence among ourselves that the people do demand a minority representation. For the express purpose of enabling minorities to be represented, the Governor of this State, in his message last winter, recommended the election of thirty-two delegates at large, each voter to vote for only sixteen. And this suggestion was approved by the people and adopted by the Legislature. It was an imperfect and objectionable method of attaining the result, which a system like the one now proposed would have accomplished in a comparatively perfect and less objectionable manner. It left the whole matter virtually in the they did in the city of New York and in the second district. Now, in regard to the various majorities. They have varied from time to time in these several districts. In some of these districts in 1864 the majority went one way, and in 1860 they went the other way; the figures being very close in them. If we were to take the number of electors that have been returned, as a basis, you would find an entirely different result, that of excluding aliens or any other portion of the population. If you take into account all these elements which go to make up the body which should be represented in the Legislature, I say these figures show that the committee had no political design to make any such predominance of control of the party now in power for the future. I might be allowed to say further that my view of changing the mode of election from small to large senatorial districts is based upon the consideration which had led gentlemen, and, I believe, the people, to desire that large districts should be restored. But, I believe, in a strict party sense it would be better for the republican party to retain a single district system if you take into account simply numbers. I believe that the result will show in the future, as it has in the past, that assuming the political parties to be divided as they are at the present time, the party to which I belong would send into the Legislature a larger proportion than we would be strictly entitled to; and take into consideration the division of the majorities under the large district system, it is a conceded result as shown, that the first and second districts would elect democrats, with doubt as to the result in the third, and the other five would very likely elect republicans. We, therefore, get in the division of the State into large or small districts a larger number of Senators than we would if we were to take the aggregate vote of the whole State. Therefore, if it is claimed that the object of recommending the large districts was looking to the future, with reference to political considerations, we must have been blind indeed to make the recommendation we did, when, in my judgment, the single districts would do better for our party than the larger districts. But I may be allowed to repeat some remarks I made yesterday, that I believe we can with larger districts, lengthened term, and increased compensation, elect men of prominence and purity, and by that means we would raise the dignity of the Senate so that it would be the pride of our State instead of a reproach. There is really no difference between a position in the Assembly and that in the Senate. A prominent man in St. Lawrence county [Mr. Hulburd] said, not long since, when asked to be a candidate to the Senate, that he would prefer being in the Assembly than in the Senate; that he regarded the dignity of an Assemblyman as equal to that of a Senator. He was, therefore, elected to the former body in 1861. Now, sir, while I am not tenacious about the manner of electing Senators, I am anxious to have the character of that body elevated and improved, and whatever I believe will tend to that result will meet with my hearty approval and support.

Mr. DUGANNE—I am at a loss whether to look upon the proposition of the gentleman from Westchester as an exemplification of universal suffrage or of universal amnesty. Certainly it appears to me as one of those extraordinary exhibitions of political magnanimity which are peculiar in theory, and not sensible and not just in practice. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I am a believer in the representation of majorities rather than minorities, and I believe it is a democratic doctrine, and a doctrine which is essential to the perpetuity and the strength of the republic, that the majority should rule and that the minority should be represented only as far as they can be. The majority of to-day, in a well constituted republic, may be the minority of to-morrow, and the minority of to-day may be the majority of to-morrow, and it is proper that such a corrective should be accessible to the people at all times; so—if a majority of this State shall embody in its partisan rule such principles or such measures as are unjust—that the next year the minority shall have power to correct the wrong by overturning the injurious majority. It is the principle of democratic rule, and I do not believe at all in this representation of minorities, which is, I am aware, an exotic of English growth. Sir, it may be very well in England, where there are distinct file leaders of divided social and political interests—where the aristocracy on one hand and the democratic population on the other hand, are two absolutely antagonistic forces. But, in a representative republic, under a democratic government—a government of the people—we need the corrective power of majority rule. And what would be the effect of this minority representation, so called, in some respects? What would result from carrying out the principle of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], through certain obvious deductions? Sir, I can fancy a case where the minority might become the majority, and might elect two out of the three candidates proposed. Supposing that, in any one locality there are twenty-five thousand republican votes, and that the strength of the democracy in that locality amounts to twenty thousand votes, what prevents the executive committee—the leaders of that democratic minority—from printing ten thousand tickets with one name repeated three times upon each ticket, making thirty thousand votes, and ten thousand other tickets, with another name printed three times on each, amounting to thirty thousand votes more, thereby electing two candidates out of three, while the majority must be content with but one candidate, chosen by its twenty-five thousand votes? I do not think that this could be deemed a representation of minorities, in the sense which the gentleman would have us receive it in. I believe in coming down, in all of our deliberations, to the first principles of democracy, of true republican democracy, which should govern this Convention; and if we have receded from them in any particular in the existing Constitution, or in former Constitutions or laws, it is for us here, in our delegated capacity, to correct all wrongs and restore all rights to the people. Sir, I do not believe in going back to the old Constitution or to any theory or practice in political matters anterior to that Constitution. I do not believe might have been; but the fault, if any there be, lies with the people themselves. Our present system, which is adopted in all of the States of the Union and indeed in all republican governments, contemplates minorities; and the larger such minorities are, the greater will be their restraining influence on the majorities. It is this that holds the ruling power to its accountability, where parties are nearly equally divided, the public good must be the ostensible object sought by each. Under such a system as ours, therefore, the great majority of the people and all the varied interests of the State will be represented and promoted. Mr. Hare has accepted ours as the true basis of popular government in contradistinction to governments of the aristocratic or monarchical form, but opposes our theory of elections on the ground that majorities are capable of greater oppression to minorities "than can be apprehended from the domination of a single superior." Our present system insures some policy in government. The one proposed, confusion in the elections and in the legislative body. The very thing he proposes to do away with is essential to us in our present condition, and will, I have no doubt, be required for a long time to come. Mr. Hare quotes with approval Mr. Burke's statement, who says, "that neither England nor France without infinite detriment to them, as well in the event as in the experiment, could be brought into a republican form; but that everything republican which can be introduced with safety into either of them must be built upon a monarchy—built upon a real not a nominal monarchy as its essential basis. In monarchical governments all institutions, either aristocratic or democratic, must originate from the Crown and in all their proceedings must refer to it; and it is by that mainspring alone those republican parts must be set in motion, and also from thence derive their whole legal effect (as amongst us they actually do) "or the whole will fall into confusion." It is from this stand-point that all reforms in the Old World have thus far been inaugurated and conducted. Not so, however, in our Republic. Here all power emanates from the people, to be prescribed and enforced in accordance with their will, under such reasonable forms and regulations as the common judgment and experience shall declare to be adapted to the merits and necessities of the whole State. Having thus argued against the system as objectionable, it is hardly necessary to show the difficulties in the way of its adoption. It might perhaps be applied, with some degree of success, in small districts or municipalities; but its complexity would make it difficult to be understood by the voter, and then there would necessarily be great opportunities for fraud by the returning and canvassing officers, especially so when estimating the number of votes given as second or third choice. I wish before taking my seat to call the attention of the committee to an argument raised in reference to the apportionment of the senate districts. It has been claimed that the committee must have taken into account the political complexion of those districts. I disavow, on the part of the committee, so far as I am concerned, any such consideration. It might have been an omission on my part, that I should thus neglect to take into account and consider the special political majorities. Since the discussion was had yesterday, I have taken pains to look over the election returns, in that regard, and I desire to present to this committee, if they will have patience, some of the results of that investigation. It has been claimed here in the discussion of the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, that the true source of government rests in the electoral body; that those who have a right to cast a vote are to cast such votes for themselves; that the majority of the political power shall govern by the expression of that body. We have not yet claimed that any man has a right to represent any other man but himself; and that nothing should be taken into account as the measure of political power but that. I would not say that this rule should be applied to the question of apportionment, but as regards the estimated strength of parties it is proper to be taken into account. I will premise by saying that the election of 1866 was as closely contested as any we have ever had in this State, and equally so with the election of 1864, although there were not quite as many votes polled as in that year. In 1866 there were 718,841 votes in the State of New York, and in the city of New York, which we have constituted one district, there were polled that year 114,169 votes. Divide that by the number of Senators which we propose, and which will give as the senatorial representation quota 21,783 votes, or 87,132 as the quota for a senatorial district having four Senators. There were cast last year, in the first district, only an excess over the proportion of five Senators, of 5,254 votes. The second district, about which there has been so much said relative to excessive population, there was not cast a vote equal to its proportion. There was a deficiency of 2,962 votes. The third district did not cast its full proportion, for there was a deficiency of 6,032 votes. In the fourth district there was an excess of 768 votes. In the fifth district there was an excess of 5,422. In the sixth 7,458, polling at that election 94,588 as against 87,132, which should be her proportion of the electoral vote. The seventh district had a deficiency of 6,575, and the eighth had a deficiency of 3,599. Now, taking into account the actual number of electors as returned by the census of 1865, New York city has 128,975; her proportion on this census, upon which we are operating, would be 124,760, leaving only a deficiency of 4,215, that is, if you take into account the actual number of voters as given by the census of 1865. They will be, therefore, represented within 4,215, and what they would be entitled to under the proposed apportionment. The second district has 106,035, the proportion of voters is 99,808, making an excess of only about 6,227. But these votes are never fully polled, and if you go into the number of votes cast at any closely contested election you will find it is a fair measure of the interest taken by the electors in the result. It is proper to take this into account when considering the question. The third district has 91,162. The result of this examination shows that in all the rural districts they cast more nearly their proportion of the votes than at least, who is to represent him in the Legislature of this State. I, for one, after hearing the many complaints made against the Legislature for corruption on this floor, want to know from personal observation, or at least from neighborhood report, whether the man for whom I am to cast my vote is an honest man, or one who would be likely to be tempted by a bribe. I should prefer that the State be divided into forty-five senatorial districts, and each district be entitled to one Senator, whose term of office should be three years; that the districts be so arranged that one-third of the districts elect each one Senator every year, and so that each county containing 85,000 inhabitants or more be entitled to be represented by one or more Senators, each Senator would then represent as many inhabitants as a Senator has heretofore represented under the former Constitutions of this State. I therefore hope that the plan recommended in the report of the committee will not be adopted.

The hour of two having arrived, the President pro tem. [Mr. Alvord] resumed the chair in Convention, when the Convention took a recess until half-past seven o'clock.

Evening Session.

The Convention re-assembled at half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. MERRITT—I have a resolution I would like to offer, which I think is of a privileged character. It is well known that the President of this body, as also the President pro tem. [Mr. Folger], are absent, and cannot attend the sittings of this Convention, perhaps for several days to come. I think it is very proper, we should have another President pro tem. and I therefore offer the following resolution:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Hon. Thomas G. Alvord be and he is hereby appointed President pro tem. in the absence of the President, Mr. Wheeler, and the President pro tem. Mr. Folger; and the Secretary is hereby directed to officially notify the Comptroller of this appointment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will inform the Convention before putting the question on this resolution, that under the rules of the Convention the Chair cannot hold its present position any longer; that the two days for which it holds the position, by the request of the President pro tem., will expire this evening, and it may be that the President pro tem. will not arrive here this evening.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Merritt, and it was declared adopted.

The Convention then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., Mr. ARCHER, of Wayne, in the chair.

The Chairman announced the question to be on the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard].

Mr. PRINDLE—I have not heretofore occupied much of the time of the Convention, or of the committee, nor do I intend to, but I have a few thoughts upon the propositions before the Committee which I wish very briefly to submit. The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], in the discussion of this proposition yesterday, seemed to carry the idea that the committee in excluding aliens from the basis of representation had been guilty of a very startling innovation. I think in the course of his remarks he said something about the committee having brought in a project, or a proposition, the effect of which was to crush out the foreign population of this State; and in order to sustain his position, the gentleman quoted from the Constitution of 1846, and placed a construction upon the clause relating to the basis of representation which I never heard placed upon it before, and I do not believe that any gentleman of less ingenuity than the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] would have ever thought of placing such a construction upon it. The section is as follows:

"The members of Assembly shall be apportioned among the several counties of this State by the Legislature, as nearly as may be, according to the number of their respective inhabitants, excluding aliens and persons of color not taxed, and shall be chosen by single districts."

And the gentleman claimed that it was the true and proper construction of this language, that aliens who were taxed should be included in the basis of representation. On looking at the Constitution of 1777, I find that the electors of the State are made the basis of representation, and electors alone. On looking at the Constitution of 1821, I find that "aliens, paupers, and persons of color not taxed" are excluded from the basis of representation, and on looking at the debates of the Convention that framed the Constitution of 1846, I find there is no sort of pretext or excuse for placing such a construction upon this portion of the Constitution. The committee in the Convention of 1846 that had this subject in charge, reported the phraseology precisely as it was in the Constitution of 1821, excluding aliens, paupers, and persons of color not taxed. A motion was made in the Convention of 1846 by Mr. Chatfield, of Otsego, I think, to strike out those words, "aliens, paupers, and persons of color not taxed," and it was subsequently withdrawn except in regard to paupers. That motion was renewed by the Hon. Mr. Bergen, who is also a member of this Convention. On motion of Mr. Baker (I think it was) the question was divided, and it was taken in that Convention distinctly upon the question of striking out the word "aliens," and, sir, it was lost, only twenty members in the whole Convention voting for striking out the word "aliens." Then, sir, on looking at the debates of the Convention of 1846, I find that no one person even suggested the idea that aliens taxed were to form a portion of the basis of representation. Nobody thought of it in that Convention, and, as I said before, there is not the slightest excuse for placing any such construction upon it. Now, sir, in view of the precedent established in 1777, the precedent established in 1821, and the precedent established in 1846, I ask you, Mr. Chairman, what justice or what fairness there was in accusing the committee of this innovation, and this attempt to crush out the foreign population of the State? The gentleman also alluded to the wealth of the great city in taking from the people one iota of that power which the people have reserved to themselves or delegated to individuals. I do not believe in the system of large districts, as regards the popular branch of our Legislature. I am aware that our republican government is a system of checks and balances; and, therefore, I do not care how you constitute your Senate, or how large your senatorial districts shall be; you may constitute it as you constituted a portion of this Convention, by the election of delegates at large, and thus elect your Senate from the whole people of the State. But, sir, I contend that we must consult the interests, the strength, and the rights of the whole people of the State, and we must come down as near to the people as it is possible for us to do, and, at the same time, obtain a proper representation. Twenty years ago, the people were left by the Constitution to elect their representatives from single districts, at a time when they were but partially educated in the knowledge of a republican form of government. Now, it is a poor compliment to our common-school system, if we cannot intrust the sole power to the people, after twenty years of education. I do not believe in going back at all. My motto is progress for the people—progress commensurate with education; and if we educate the people to the point where they can understand politics, and understand politicians, we need not fear to intrust them with the election of their own representatives from circles as near to their homes as may be possible. Sir, if I desired an agent to transact business for me at a distant point, I should take care, if possible, to secure a man who is known in the range of my business acquaintance as a true man, an honest man. I should not take some person from another city or another portion of the country whom I did not know. I think that the people of small districts, in electing members to the popular branch of the Legislature, ought to be governed by the same desire. We should take those men whom we know, and I believe that we can find in our circles of acquaintance, men whom we can trust, and who are known to us more thoroughly than any man can be whose residence is remote from us in the district or county.

Mr. YOUNG—I think the plan submitted by the committee is objectionable in every light in which it can be viewed. It is objectionable for the reasons assigned by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], by the gentleman from Besselsler [Mr. M. I. Townsend], and the gentleman from Orange [Mr. Fullerton]; and in addition to the reasons assigned by them, I think it is objectionable in its political division of the State into senatorial districts. Taking the vote cast at last fall's election for a basis, the political majorities in the several senatorial districts are as follows: The first district gave a democratic majority of 46,266; the second district a democratic majority of 10,244, making a democratic majority in the first and second districts of 56,510. The third district gave a republican majority of 3,085; the fourth district gave a republican majority of 17,475; the fifth district gave a republican majority of 12,476; the sixth district gave a republican majority of 12,566; the seventh district gave a republican majority of 12,022; and the eighth district gave a republican majority of 15,356. I made this calculation from the vote cast for State Prison Inspector, believing that the vote cast for that office more nearly represents the party strength in the several districts than any other. Thus the Convention will see that the first and second districts, with a democratic majority of 56,510, can only elect nine Senators, while the other six districts, with an aggregate republican majority of 72,883, will elect twenty-four republican Senators, for the reason that the republican majority in those districts is nearly evenly divided between those districts. Now, sir, we have inserted a provision in the second article of our proposed Constitution, prohibiting bribery and corruption at the polls, but we have adopted no provision as yet to prevent corruption and bribery at the nominating conventions. It must be obvious to every person present that a nomination in each of these districts will be equivalent to an election, and it is easy to imagine the means that will be resorted to by the contesting candidates to secure a nomination. Now, sir, in my humble judgment the sovereign power in a republican government is vested in the people. We the people are the sovereigns, and our representatives in our State Legislature or in the Congress of the United States are our legislative servants, selected by us to represent our sovereign will in those two bodies. Now, sir, if it is bad policy to have the State divided into districts small enough to enable the Representatives to know and understand the wants and interests of their constituents—if it is bad policy to have the people directly and fairly represented in these halls—then we had better retrace our steps and return to the old monarchical system and proclaim to the world that with us a republican form of government has proved to be a failure. Why, sir, the people are more nearly represented in the Congress of the United States than they will be in the Legislature of this State by the plan submitted by this report. The city and county of New York, a city representing almost the entire commercial interests of this State and containing nearly one-fourth of its inhabitants, is but one assembly district and one senatorial district, while it is divided into six congressional districts and each Congressman represents particular wards and districts of that great city. The county of Kings, sir, is divided into two congressional districts, while by the plan submitted in this report, it is but one assembly district and a fractional part of a senatorial district. The counties of Erie and Oneida are each but one assembly district, and each but a fractional part of a senate district, while each of those counties are congressional districts. Besides, sir, the fourth senatorial district is to comprise one-third of the whole territory of the State of New York, and the electors will know but little more of the personal character of the nominee for honesty and integrity, much less of his intellectual qualifications, than if he was nominated from the State at large. I believe, sir, that every elector in this State desires to know personally, if possible, something of the character of the man, for common honesty cerned. Now, sir, in regard to the election of a Governor, in regard to the election of State officers, in regard to the election of a President of the United States, we do elect men that we know; we elect men who have been before the public for a long period of time, and we know them by the record that they have made. We know them by their acts and by what they have done before the people of the State of New York, but it is not necessary that we should take men for Senators who have had a large experience; we must necessarily take some men who have had a limited experience perhaps in legislation, and by that means perhaps often get the very best men. I am in favor, sir, of a conservative Senate. I am in favor of a Senate that will be a check upon the other branch of the Legislature. I know that there are times when the people perhaps may go a little too fast, and when the representatives elected annually by the people, coming fresh from the people, may be inclined to be a little rash and to go too fast in a time of high political excitement. But, sir, I would make the Senate conservative by electing them, if you please, for a longer period of time, by allowing them to be elected for four years, and have them arranged in such a manner that one would be elected annually, if you please, so that there may be a fresh infusion each year from the people into the body of the Senate. I do not see why that would not preserve the conservatism of the Senate, and make it a sufficiently conservative body. But, sir, suppose you elect from large districts in this State, and suppose there should happen to be what is sometimes called a "regency" here in the city of Albany, extending throughout the State, having its agents and instruments in every county in this State; suppose that regency gets the entire possession, and succeeds in controlling the nomination and election of Senators, they must, under that arrangement necessarily, to a large extent, control the action of those Senators when they come to take their places in the body of the Senate. With such a power as this, sir, they would almost necessarily elect the Governor; and if important officers are appointed by the Governor, and confirmed by the Senate, they would in a large measure control the whole of those officers—

Here the gavel fell, the gentleman's time having expired.

Mr. MERWIN—I desire, Mr. Chairman, to state briefly, the reasons that induced me, as one of the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature, to concur in the proposition to elect Senators by large districts. Under the present Constitution, the Senators are all elected at one time, and of course, all go out of office at one time. And therein is the defect. I have no fault to find with the present Senate districts, or with the number of Senators or their general character and standing, except this liability to have an entire new set of men every two years. It is this possible, and in practice, usual lack of experience in the members of the Senate that in my mind condemns its present constitution. As a matter of fact, not one quarter of the Senators are re-elected, and the new members must be engaged for one-half their term in learning how to do their duty. The institutions of our State, from their magnitude and variety, require a patient and long examination in order to be well understood and properly criticised and governed. The extent and bearing of all our varied public interests which require legislation, cannot be comprehended in a day or in a month, and therefore it is that a body, intended in our republican theory of government, to be a conservative, restraining and revising power, should be so constituted as to be always composed of a majority of men of experience. This is one of the first elements, if not the first, that should be attained. The plan proposed by the committee is deemed the most feasible way of accomplishing this all important result. I should personally be satisfied if the State were divided into sixteen senate districts having two Senators each, and electing one every two years, thereby resulting in having always one-half old and experienced members. In 1846 the Committee on the Organization, etc, of the Legislature reported that thirty-two Senators should be elected for two years in single districts, but in order to allow the element of experience which they deemed necessary, they provided that elections should be had in one-half the districts every year. This was objected to as giving opportunity for colonization and fraud, was called the ride and tie system, and was abandoned. I think the arguments there used and which are to be found in the reports of that body, will convince any man of the lack of feasibility in a system of elections for State officers only in one portion of the State in a year. That Convention lost the opportunity of having experienced men in the Senate, but gained uniformity in election. I think the experience and observation of the last twenty years have convinced the people that we need a change in this respect in order to accomplish the results aimed at in having a Senate at all, and I, therefore, shall support the plan of the committee or any other that will accomplish the same result. If we look at the Constitutions of the other States as to the term of office of Senators, we find that in sixteen States the term of office is four years; in twelve States it is two years, and in six States — being the New England States—it is one year; but in the majority of all the States it is so arranged that they shall not all be elected at one time. It may be proper also for me to state here that I am opposed to this body making any apportionment of the State into senate districts. I think that is a part of the duty of the Legislature. It is a matter of detail that we have no business with. It will only incur the Constitution, and it is unnecessary for us to do it; and there is another and a stronger reason, which is, that the moment we start to apportion we step into the political arena; we leave our province as Constitution makers, and place ourselves where motives of policy or partisanship will almost inevitably be charged upon us. We will thus unnecessarily disturb the harmony of our deliberations, and descend to the level of a mere political Convention. It will be besides an entire waste of time. Certainly, that we cannot afford now. We can, very likely, agree upon principles. We can lay down general rules for the government and guidance of the State, but the moment we come to a matter of detail, like this apportionment, we of New York, and its surroundings. I do not know for what purpose; I cannot understand for what motive, unless it was because the gentleman is in favor of the principle of property qualification. I trust, sir, that we have got beyond that. But the gentleman must be either in favor of the principle of property qualification, or else his words amounted to nothing, and were entirely meaningless in this discussion, when he alluded to the large amount of property in the city of New York. Why, sir, we of the country might as well allude to the broad acres that we possess, and say that our representation ought to be increased because we have these broad lands, whilst those in the city are pent up within narrow limits. I claim sir, that the true basis of representation, and the philosophical basis of representation is the electors of the State. They have the political authority of the State. I know, sir, that it may be inconvenient, it may be impracticable to allow the census taken to determine who the electors are, and perhaps it may be as well, and will be substantially correct to base the representation upon all the citizens of the State of New York. But, sir, I claim that there is no foundation for the idea or the claim, that aliens should be counted as a portion of the basis of representation. I believe, sir, that every elector ought to be equal, and have equal political power in the State of New York, whether he lives in the country or whether he lives in the city, whether he lives among aliens or whether he lives elsewhere. Sir, this is a representative government, and who are the persons that are represented in the Legislature and in the Senate of this State? They are those, sir, who send their representatives to the city of Albany to act in their place and stead. Senators are not sent here, sir, to act in the place of aliens. Why do we send representatives here at all? It is because the body of electors find it inconvenient and entirely impracticable to come here and transact their business, and perform acts of legislation, therefore they select men as their representatives, not as the representatives of aliens to come here and transact their business for them. And I believe, sir, as I said before, that the true basis is the electors themselves. In regard to the large districts which are proposed by the committee, although I would like very much to agree with the report of that committee, I am compelled to say that I have not been convinced of their propriety by the arguments that have been adduced here. I have great respect for the ability and the integrity of that committee, but yet, Mr. Chairman, I feel bound to act upon my own judgment, and to do what I believe the interests of the great State of New York require. And sir, I am opposed to these very large districts that have been proposed by this committee for the same reason that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] expressed himself as opposed to those large districts, because I think I can see that it will take the power out of the hands of the people, and throw it into the hands of the politicians. Now, sir, what will be the political workings of this system? The gentleman seeking a nomination in a large district (embracing twelve counties perhaps, as the district in which I am placed does), will look around in the first place to find his friends to procure him the nomination, and to whom would he go? It would be utterly impossible for him to address himself to the people at large to any particular extent. He must necessarily go to the politicians for his support and for strength to procure him the nomination. And, sir, it does seem to me that there would be what I have heard termed a "regency," established in this State, having naturally its head-quarters at the seat of government, here in Albany, which would reach out its long and meddlesome fingers into every district in this State, and would control the nomination and election of Senators in nearly every district. The gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] says it is necessary that the Senate should be a dignified body, and that Senators elected should be men of reputation. I believe too, sir, that they should be men of reputation, and men of ability, and men of integrity, but, sir, I do not think it is absolutely essential that they should be possessed of that doubtful reputation which is manufactured by the newspapers of this State. I would prefer, sir, a man who has a reputation at home, a man who has a good reputation among his fellow townsmen in his own county, and in the adjoining counties, that he has acquired by his acts and dealings among his fellow citizens day after day, and I believe, sir, that that is a more substantial reputation than a reputation that is often acquired through the newspapers. I think I can see, sir, how, in this large district system, a great man could be made very quick, if it was necessary, in order to put him in nomination for a Senator. It would be only necessary, sir, to publish an article in the newspapers, and send it afloat in other papers interested in the same projects in this State, and a man might spring from a common man to a great man, almost like a mushroom, in a single night, and he would become the only man that could justly and properly represent his district in the State of New York. I claim, sir, that the people in these election districts ought to have the privilege of knowing the men whom they are to send to the Legislature. We act, sir, upon this principle in all our business affairs, in all the ordinary transactions of life. We do not, in a business point of view, trust a man with our dearest and most important interests unless we know him ourselves. We do not take the reputation that is so easily acquired in the newspapers. We do not take the say-so of politicians, but we act upon our own information and upon our own knowledge. I believe that in the Senate districts as they are now organized, and in each of them, there are men of intelligence, and there are men, too, of integrity, sufficient to act as Senators in this State without embracing too many counties or too much population in these large districts. Sir, the best representation we have in this State is in the board of supervisors, where the people of the town know their men—the very best representation we have. There, sir, in the primary meetings the people get together and nominate the men they want, and the men that they know, and they nominate capable and trusty men who perform the duties of their situation well and faithfully, so far, I believe, at least, as the county districts are conbarassing task of making this arrangement of senate districts? If it be made by this body, it will be but in the first instance—at the next enumeration it will necessarily devolve on the Legislature to make the re-arrangement which will become unavoidable. Why not have the Legislature do it in the first instance as well as subsequently? I hold that this arrangement of senate districts is a legislative act. The Constitution of twenty-two States of this Union, which I have examined, are free from the absurdity of having senate districts crammed into them. The province and the only province of this body is to issue its mandate to the Legislature, prescribing the manner in which this service shall be performed, and when this is done, the proper functions of this body cease. I hold it right, therefore, that we should refrain from the attempt to incorporate the senate districts into the Constitution, and thus save the time it will waste and the annoyance which will ensue. It is not only right, Mr. Chairman, but it is politic. The discussions which have already been had must satisfy gentlemen on this floor that when we enter upon this discussion of making suitable senate districts—when we attempt to make them with the most honest and earnest desire to conform to every right and protect every interest, we encounter serious objections and prejudices: and whatever may be the fate of this Constitution at the hands of the people, I venture this prediction, that if this Convention thrusts into the body of it these senate districts it will cost thousands of votes on the question of its adoption. We must necessarily encounter the prejudices of location and the real or fancied inconveniences which must necessarily occur. If angels were to form those senate districts they would, in the estimation of some men, be imperfect. They would encounter the hostility of many portions of our State, which would manifest itself at the polls. My project, Mr. Chairman, rightfully and appropriately, it seems to me, refers to the Legislature this work of arranging these senate districts and defining the time within which that service shall be performed. They should be of convenient and contiguous territory, and they should, as near as may be, of an equal number of inhabitants, excluding aliens, and in this I adopt the text of the old Constitution so far as aliens are concerned. Under it, I hold, Mr. Chairman, we shall attain every practical result sought for by the advocates of the large senate districts. We shall have the service of men in that place for four years, and the only difference is that instead of electing one Senator in each of eight senate districts in each year, we shall elect them in the order I have named, or in some other order which shall substantially conform. Thus if this section is adopted, and the Constitution be approved also, at the first election of Senators which would occur, the whole number would be chosen. At the end of the first year, Senators would be chosen in the second, fourth, sixth, eighth, tenth, twelfth, fourteenth and sixteenth senate districts. At the end of the second year they would be chosen in the eighteenth, twentieth, twenty-second, twenty-fourth, twenty-sixth, twenty-eighth, thirtieth, and thirty-second districts. At the end of the third, in the first, third and fifth, and so on up to the the fifteenth, and in the fourth year in the seventeenth, nineteenth and twenty-first, and so on up to the thirty-first district, and then continuing in rotation in this order. I offer this proposition, Mr. Chairman, and make these suggestions as a contribution in the direction of helping us out of the embarrassments which are surrounding us, and which I am sure will increase as this discussion goes on, especially if the attempt be persevered in by this Convention to form these senate districts of this State. As I said in the outset, sir, the substitution is not in order now, but if favorably received I will offer it as a substitute for the amendment moved by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] at the proper time.

Mr. KERNAN—Although it was not my intention to take any part in this discussion at this time, nevertheless as no other gentleman seems desirous of occupying the attention of the committee, I will ask leave to make a few suggestions. The object, as I assume, of vesting the legislative power of the State in two bodies, is that one may be to some extent a check upon the other. The Senate, the smaller body, should be so constituted, in my judgment, as that it shall possess different characteristics from the House. It should be so constituted that it shall have more of stability and permanence, and less of local prejudice and local interests; so constituted as to be influenced less by popular and temporary excitement than the other branch of the Legislature. In a word, the members of the Senate should represent to a greater degree the interests of the State and the entire people, than does the more popular branch of the Legislature. And in organizing the Senate we should endeavor to so organize it that it shall have these characteristics. The scheme of the committee which has been laid before us, is that the State shall be divided into eight large districts, in each of which four Senators shall be elected whose term of office shall be four years, and so arranged that a quarter of the body shall go out each year and the people elect others to supply their places. The plan proposed by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], as an amendment, is that we shall have thirty-two comparatively small districts, and one Senator elected in each, whose term shall expire at the end of two years. By this plan as I understand it, all the Senators will come into office at the same time, and the terms of each expire at the same time. In my judgment, sir, the principle which underlies the plan of the committee is preferable with a view to make the Senate what it should be. There is no object in having substantially two Houses of Assembly or two branches of the Legislature, each having substantially the characteristics of the other. It seems to me that the plan of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] makes the Senate substantially what the Assembly is. It is true that the term of office is to be two instead of one year, and the district is larger than the assembly district, but the Senator will be in effect a mere local representative, and the body will not have the permanent character which it should have. By electing Senators from large districts for four years, with only one-fourth are all afloat with one hundred and sixty pilots to guide us, all of whom think they are right, and that their own localities must be attended to. Reference has been made by the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale] to a remark of mine about the tyranny of majorities in a report that was made by me. My remark, in that connection, was this: "The ingenious theories of Mr. Hare, are more adapted to the evils of the British system than our own. His fear of the tyranny of majorities has not much foundation in fact with us." Now, then, what was his fear and its basis? It was the fear that if the great mass of the people, the democracy as he terms them, had once the reins of power in their hands, they would oppress and tyrannize over the other classes of community, the more educated, or intelligent, or wealthy; and in the minorities which he speaks of, he always places the more intelligent and virtuous, and pleads for them a constitutional provision for their proper representation. And as illustrations of his theory he refers to the tyranny of the democracies of ancient Grecian republics, and to the tendencies of the American republics, as those tendencies asserted in the works of John C. Calhoun, his favorite authority of the author, and of reliability I need not here speak. In other words, in a country where there were classes recognized by law, the fear of Mr. Hare was that if the majority got the power in its hands, it would tyrannize over another class, its inferior in numbers, but superior in intelligence and virtue. It is a fear that in this country, there is no foundation for such a fear, and that is all I said. I made. I admit, sir, and strongly. In our deliberations we should have no regard to partisan feelings or results. While the majority always will govern, it is not the majority of to-day may be the minority to-morrow, and in forming or laying down a constitutional principle, it is not the majority whether in the majority or in the minority, or support a rule or principle which he is not willing to support himself.

Mr. FLAGLER — I have no opinion, sir, that in consequence of the State it would be wise to change the arrangement of eight Senators from this body with the hope of obtaining a more equitable proportion of the standing and expected to support you, sir, that the majority had in this body regard to the admission of me to doubt also to concur in the A great and proper for in the process is to make character, increasing, and once

communities. I think elections are popular enough, and are known to their constituents; and in my opinion the State Assembly will give the State House of Representatives the same. We continue to elect our representatives, and I permit me to make a statement not very pertinent to the subject of apportionment, but I am tempted to frame a Congressional number of years; and I am tempted to produce our State, for ourselves. While I have as much to say as the gentleman for the people, I am under scrutiny of the people, and the experience teaches us that it is wiser to let the people to have done with it rather than through the desire, although it may not be wise, to say, in answer to the gentleman from Rensselaer County, that, in my judgment, we can do better before the Conference to the appointing of some of the executive officers. How is your executive under the present Constitution? I have no responsibility anywhere. I feel, the gentleman's time has

I do not propose to enter into any question which forms the main subject of the report under consideration, the adding of returning to a large district rather than to continue single districts. I had designed that other gentlemen given the subject more thought than myself, should present the committee on that question. I intend to enter minutely into the subject of the foul and unjust charges made by the committee by the gentleman from [Mr. E. Brooks], and the gentleman from [Mr. Conger] who addressed the last evening. Something less than the two months during which we have been here was sufficient to develop the charges there were in this body gentlemen anything could be judged from their acts and speeches, were more intent upon finding fault to carp at in the action of the majority upon furthering the legitimate objects of the Convention. Why, sir, gentlemen travel out of the way and actually go begging for grievances. They are disappointed and chagrined if they do not gather up nothing through the day which they can throw into the face of the majority of the Convention. I did think, when those gentlemen were handling the committee so roughly last night, that perhaps it might be necessary, or proper at least, for some members of that committee to vindicate themselves and their conduct; yet when I came to reflect how cheaply these charges were made, and how common and how little respect or regard they were entitled to, I made up my mind to pass them by as I do now. What are we charged with, or what grievances have the gentlemen now found? It is charged that this committee in preparing their report were governed by partisan motives and partisan designs; that we "gerrymandered" the State; that we picked out a county here and a county there, and divided the State into eight republican districts, except the little matter of New York, where, I believe, they concede we have been so fair as to give them a democratic district. Now, I might say with perfect truth, if it were worth while, that I religiously believe that the subject of politics, or the political complexion of those districts, did not enter into the consideration of that committee at all. The two gentlemen on that committee from New York, gentlemen of intelligence and integrity, and who, I understand, belong to the same political party with our accusers, have concurred most heartily in the principle of this report, and in the details of the apportionment, and I believe they will support me in saying that the apportionment had no partisan purpose whatever. But what is the complaint here? Why the first complaint is that whereas the republicans have only a majority equal to two percent upon the whole vote in the State, yet by this apportionment we get twenty-four republican to nine democratic Senators, and thus they charge to the committee the consequences of the whole democratic majority being pent up in the city of New York and its environs. We cannot help that; the committee did not know of any way to diffuse and scatter this majority over the State. We did not feel at liberty to put into the same district anything but contiguous territory. If we could have brought down St. Lawrence county, and put it into some of the wards in New York, I have no doubt my friend from Richmond [Mr. Brooks] would have been better satisfied with the result. Then again, we did not proceed right; we adopted an erroneous basis of representation, and the gentleman seemed very indignant that this committee had found out a new basis of representation, that we had dared, in violation of precedent, as was argued, to exclude aliens from the basis of representation. It has already been shown how unjust that charge is. It has already been shown, that that has always been the rule in the State. In 1821, "aliens, paupers, and colored persons not taxed," were excluded; and in 1846, "aliens and colored persons not taxed." There never has been any other rule in this State, and indeed I know of no other wise, just or sensible rule. The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] says, 400,000 aliens are excluded from representation—400,000 subjects of a foreign power to-day, are not permitted to enter as an active element into our political system, they are not counted in making up the representation. So much this offense amounts to. But I will not pursue this fault-finding further. The committee were not only unanimous in regard to the principle of returning to the large district system, but they were unanimous in regard to the apportionment details, provided the apportionment should be made by the Convention at all. From the inquiries made of different members of this Convention, I supposed we represented the views of a decided majority when we made this change. All I have to say on the main question now is, that it seems to me of the members going out each year, we secure stability in the legislation and policy of the State, and to a considerable extent we secure a body having large experience. Its members will not be mere local representatives. They will partake to a considerable degree of the character of State representatives; they will not, in my judgment, be as liable to be the selection of cliques. Men of greater experience will be secured in electing by large rather than small districts; at least this will be the tendency. In a district of six or eight counties and of wide territory, each of the rival parties will be likely to select as a candidate a person who has been engaged in public affairs and acquired a reputation for ability and integrity. This will not be so probable when the selection is to be from small districts. I know gentlemen have said, that it is very desirable that a Senator should be elected from a small district, to the end that the electors may be well acquainted with him. If the districts are large, men will be selected as candidates with a view to success who are known over the entire district, rather than persons who, oftentimes, by management have secured mere local favor. Without intending or desiring to institute comparisons, I submit that the experience under the Constitution prior to 1846 and our experience since are in favor of large Senate districts. The Senate under the Constitution of 1821 was a body, I submit to every gentleman, of greater weight in legislation, was composed of men who seemed to look to the interest of the entire State more and to mere locality less, than gentlemen in the Senate of equal integrity and ability since. We secured, under the former Constitution, a stability in our policy and legislation, and a freedom from the influence of temporary excitement, greater than we have had since. I do not desire to point to particular instances, but I appeal to each gentleman's recollection. Another advantage of a large district is that four men are elected from it, and each year the people are called upon to elect one of them, and thus can indicate their views on public questions every year in every district. Nevertheless, there is retained in the body that experience, that knowledge of State affairs and State wants, which are acquired by a term of four years, and which is available to the new members. I, prior to the discussion here, supposed there was little difference of opinion on this question; that there was a universal feeling among the people of the State that the able Convention of 1846 made a mistake when it divided the State into a large number of small senate and assembly districts. I believed that it was the general opinion among the people of the State that the legislation had not been as wise, our State affairs not as well conducted or administered, since 1846 as previously. The system then adopted did not tend to give us in the Senate a body of experienced, independent men, not influenced by local feelings and local prejudices, and not susceptible to every current of public opinion—a body of men who looked to the interest of the entire State, and who were familiar with its affairs, condition and wants, and who were at times a wholesome check upon the more popular branch of the Legislature, which is liable to be too much moved by temporary excitement and clamor. Under the plan proposed by the committee, we have combined the advantages of large districts and long terms. We constitute the Senate so that its members shall have experience and the body itself stability, and yet it will each year be subjected to the scrutiny of the electors, and be influenced by their voice in the election of one-fourth of the body. I therefore trust that this Convention will adopt the principle of making the Senate, through these large districts, a different body from what it now is, making, as I trust and believe this Convention desires to do, the districts fairly, and thus disarming opposition and uniting all the friends of the plan of large districts in its support. They should be made fairly, in reference to population, and in reference to geographical lines, and also in reference to the effect upon political parties as they exist. I believe that this is the desire of the members of this Convention. I believe there is a desire among those who are in favor of the large district plan, to see that they are so formed that no man, even if he is somewhat jealous in his partisan feelings, can say that they are not fair with reference to all. I trust this will be done, that we shall alter and perfect the report of the committee in this spirit, and thus in the Constitution to be proposed we shall return to the system of a Senate elected from large districts. I am also in favor of electing the members of Assembly by counties, rather than from smaller districts. Thus they were elected prior to 1846. My earnest and eloquent friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] seemed somewhat startled at the idea of going back in this age of progress to what our fathers practiced. I am in favor of everything I believe to be progress in the wise and well government of our State, and in the improving of our Constitution. But it is not wise to be alarmed by the mere cry that we are retrograding when we only propose to return to that which worked well, and to abandon only a novelty which experience has demonstrated not to be an improvement. Now, I appeal to every gentleman who remembers the elections before 1846. Take, for instance, a county like Oneida or Onondaga; each of the parties would make nominations, and each would place on its ticket at least one or two strong, experienced men. It was found that a man of mere local reputation, who had not become well and favorably known over the county, would fail to be elected. Hence, each party sought to nominate men of known ability and integrity throughout the county, to the end that they might be successful. How is it now? Is it not true that an active and intriguing politician will caucus himself into a nomination and election in four or five towns, when he would not be able to obtain either if he had to submit himself to a vote of the electors of the entire county? I do not say it has always worked so, because I know that many excellent and able men have been and are elected to the Assembly under the present system, but is it not true that small, scheming men have in small districts managed to get a nomination and election, who could not succeed and would not be thought of

if the elections were by counties. I think elections of members of Assembly are popular enough in the sense of having men known to their constituents when they are by counties; and in my judgment elections by counties will give the State an abler and more independent House of Assembly than we will have while we continue to elect by smaller districts. Now, sir, permit me to make another suggestion which is not very pertinent to this question. We are attempting to frame a Constitution for our State, for a number of years; and we should endeavor to frame it so as to produce the best government for our State, for ourselves and for our children. While I have as much respect as any other gentleman for the people and for bringing things under scrutiny of the people, yet experience teaches us there are some things which it is wiser and for the good of the people to have done through officers appointed rather than through officers elected; and I desire, although it may not be thought popular by some, to say, in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] that, in my judgment, we can wisely go back to where we were before the Constitution of 1846 in reference to the appointing rather than the electing of some of the executive officers of this State. How is your executive State government under the present Constitution? No head, no unity, no responsibility anywhere.

Here the gavel fell, the gentleman's time having expired.

Mr. COOKE—I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the question which forms the main feature of the report under consideration, the advantages to spring from returning to a large district system rather than to continue single districts as they now are. I had designed that other gentlemen, who had given the subject more thought and were more capable than myself, should present the views of the committee on that question. Neither do I intend to enter minutely into the facts to repel the foul and unjust charges made against the committee by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], and the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] who addressed the committee last evening. Something less than the term of two months during which we have been in session here was sufficient to develop the fact that there were in this body gentlemen who, if anything could be judged from their acts and speeches, were more intent upon finding something to carp at in the action of the majority than upon furthering the legitimate objects of the Convention. Why, sir, gentlemen travel out of the way and actually go begging for grievances, and they are disappointed and chagrined if they can gather up nothing through the day which they can throw into the face of the majority of this Convention. I did think, when those gentlemen were handling the committee so roughly last night, that perhaps it might be necessary, or proper at least, for some members of that committee to vindicate themselves and their conduct; yet when I came to reflect how cheaply these charges were made, and how common and how little respect or regard they were entitled to, I made up my mind to pass them by as I do now. What are we charged with, or what grievances have the gentlemen now found? It is charged that this committee in preparing their report were governed by partisan motives and partisan designs; that we "gerrymandered" the State; that we picked out a county here and a county there, and divided the State into eight republican districts, except the little matter of New York, where, I believe, they concede we have been so fair as to give them a democratic district. Now, I might say with perfect truth, if it were worth while, that I religiously believe that the subject of politics, or the political complexion of those districts, did not enter into the consideration of that committee at all. The two gentlemen on that committee from New York, gentlemen of intelligence and integrity, and who, I understand, belong to the same political party with our accusers, have concurred most heartily in the principle of this report, and in the details of the apportionment, and I believe they will support me in saying that the apportionment had no partisan purpose whatever. But what is the complaint here? Why the first complaint is that whereas the republicans have only a majority equal to two per cent upon the whole vote in the State, yet by this apportionment we get twenty-four republican to nine democratic Senators, and thus they charge to the committee the consequences of the whole democratic majority being pent up in the city of New York and its environs. We cannot help that; the committee did not know of any way to diffuse and scatter this majority over the State. We did not feel at liberty to put into the same district anything but contiguous territory. If we could have brought down St. Lawrence county, and put it into some of the wards in New York, I have no doubt my friend from Richmond [Mr. Brooks] would have been better satisfied with the result. Then again, we did not proceed right; we adopted an erroneous basis of representation, and the gentleman seemed very indignant that this committee had found out a new basis of representation, that we had dared, in violation of precedent, as was argued, to exclude aliens from the basis of representation. It has already been shown how unjust that charge is. It has already been shown, that that has always been the rule in the State. In 1821, "aliens, paupers, and colored persons not taxed," were excluded; and in 1846, "aliens and colored persons not taxed." There never has been any other rule in this State, and indeed I know of no other wise, just or sensible rule. The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] says, 400,000 aliens are excluded from representation—400,000 subjects of a foreign power to-day, are not permitted to enter as an active element into our political system, they are not counted in making up the representation. So much this offense amounts to. But I will not pursue this fault-finding further. The committee were not only unanimous in regard to the principle of returning to the large district system, but they were unanimous in regard to the apportionment details, provided the apportionment should be made by the Convention at all. From the inquiries made of different members of this Convention, I supposed we represented the views of a decided majority when we made this change. All I have to say on the main question now is, that it seems to me to be worthy of grave consideration by this Convention, to what extent this higher branch of the Legislature, this conservative branch, the Senate, ought to represent local constituencies. What is the object, as has been argued by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], of two houses, if they are to be organized alike, representing local constituencies alike? I do not think there is anything in the argument that every individual of the constituency should know personally the man who is to represent them in the Senate. I believe that our constituents demand some change, some improvement, something that will elevate the standard, if possible, of the Legislature. I intended to allude to one argument made use of by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] last evening. He says, under the old system to which we propose to return now, there was a man expelled from the Senate for corruption, and he says triumphantly, there has been no expulsion for such a cause under the present system for the last twenty years. I am not sure, sir, that it is entirely creditable to the Senate that for the last twenty years they have not expelled any member for corruption. I think the argument does not amount to anything until the gentleman shows that no Senator has deserved expulsion under the present system. He thinks if we return to this system politicians will get control of the Senate; they will have control of the nominations. How will it be so then more than it is now? Then delegates will be sent from different counties to the senatorial convention, and these delegates whom gentlemen may call politicians or agents of the "Albany Regency," if the Regency is not already dead—call them what you will, these delegates will be sent by the people to nominate Senators, precisely as is done now. They are just as much politicians who nominate Senators now; the same delegates are sent now as would be if the districts were larger. It is said the Senator will be the creature of the caucus. All the difference is, a small caucus makes the Senator now, whereas under the old system to which we propose to return, the caucus is composed of a larger body of men. I would as soon trust a large caucus as a small one. The committee anticipated the difficulty the Convention would find in agreeing upon an apportionment, and I was therefore disposed to report the principle upon which the apportionment was to be made and then send it to the Legislature to make the apportionment. I anticipated precisely the difficulty we find here. My colleague [Mr. Schoonmaker] stands up and says he is in favor of returning to the large district system, but he cannot go for the present apportionment, it does not place his county right. My friend from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker] was in favor of the principle, but he prefers rather to remain according to the present arrangement than to adopt this apportionment. And why? Because by this apportionment St. Lawrence swallows up Albany, instead of being swallowed up by Albany. He wants his county in the third district, and nowhere else. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] wants to send Westchester out of the second district, and the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], on behalf of the republicans of that county, wants to come into the third district, and he apprehends no great difficulty in inducing this Convention to accommodate him. I hope he may get into the third district. But what a district the third will be with all this territory and all these men. I did not know of anything so attractive in the third district, that all these gentlemen should choose it in preference to all others. Why is it, sir? It is utterly impossible to satisfy every one on this floor upon an apportionment, particularly in forming large districts. I have drawn up a new apportionment, simply to show that this matter can be done in another way perhaps, and in such a way as to obviate some of the objections made by the gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to the report. I think I do not care much myself about the political aspect of these districts. I think I feel reasonably indifferent upon that subject, because we know that in the mutations of parties, three years may produce an entire change in the result in all these districts. What is now democratic, I hope and expect will be entirely republican three years hence. I really don't know why it should not be so. If this Constitution is adopted, we have taken the negro out of politics entirely and I do not know what possible capital the democratic party will have to trade upon; particularly as John Surratt's trial will have been ended, and he probably hung long before the adjournment of this Convention. But I do not think there is anything to be gained by one party or the other in an apportionment of this kind. I think the party that undertakes any gerrymandering or unfairness in a business of this kind will suffer for it in the end. Now I propose to return to the former number of thirty-two Senators in eight districts—the ratio being 428,000. I find that the counties of New York, Kings and Richmond, contain sufficient population for two districts. These three counties contain just 856,000, and I propose to leave it to some gentleman from New York, who are acquainted with the ward divisions of the city, to divide New York and carve out of it one district, and to set off the balance to the two counties of Kings and Richmond; these will undoubtedly be democratic districts—no man doubts that. Then for the third district I propose Suffolk, Queens, Westchester, Rockland, Putnam, Dutchess, Orange and Ulster, making 410,600; that falls 18,000 short of the ratio. This is undoubtedly a democratic district, and obviates another objection made by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] last night. There is a deficiency in this district. It falls below the ratio rather than being in excess of it. For the fourth district I propose Columbia, Rensselaer, Albany, Greene, Schenectady, Saratoga, Washington, Warren and Essex, a very compact district coming within 13,000 of the ratio, being 415,000. For the fifth district, Clinton, Franklin, St. Lawrence, Jefferson, Lewis, Herkimer, Hamilton, Fulton and Oneida, making 384,000. Here is a greater deficiency, but the territory is large and some portion of the district somewhat inaccessible, so I do not feel authorized to insert another county. I do not know that the special guardians of the democratic party—the two gentlemen who addressed us last evening—have objection to this arrangement on the score of politics. For the sixth district, I propose Sullivan, Delaware, Schoharie, Montgomery, Otsego, Madison, Chenango, Broome, Tioga, Cortland, Tompkins, Chemung and Schuyler, 429,000. The seventh district, Oswego, Onondaga, Cayuga, Wayne, Seneca, Yates, Ontario, Monroe, Livingston. Here is quite an excess, 468,000 — 40,000. excess. The eighth district, Orleans, Niagara, Erie, Genesee, Wyoming, Steuben, Allegany, Cattaraugus and Chautauqua, 462,000. Now, these two districts are somewhat in excess, but the objections made to the apportionment reported are obviated. I only present this to show that the State is susceptible of another apportionment and that it is not necessary for us to give up in despair of ever being able to apportion the State into eight satisfactory senate districts.

Mr. CARPENTER—I dislike very much to detain the Convention at this late hour. I make no issue with the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Cooke], or with the committee, as to the apportionment which has been presented for the consideration of the Convention, provided the proposed large district system shall prevail, nor shall I say anything in reference to the duration of the senatorial term, because, under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], the only question now presented for the decision of this body is whether it will provide for the retention of the senatorial districts as now organized by law, or recommend the formation of the enlarged districts as proposed by the committee. To this question I shall briefly address myself. I am not aware that it may be regarded as an act of indiscretion, if not of temerity, to dissent from the conclusions of the standing committee—a committee the weight of whose names and the power of whose influence would contribute largely to the adoption of any proposition that they might submit, and I dissent only because I have been unable to discover the first substantial reason for the alteration of the present system. The committee seem to have conceived, and based their report upon, the fallacious theory that the extension of the territorial limits of a district will tend necessarily to the enlargement of the mental and moral stature of the representative. Experience and reason alike prove this theory to be unsound and unsustainable by fact. Under the Constitution adopted in 1821, Assemblymen and Senators were elected in the manner now proposed by the committee. A glance at the Civil List for the twenty-five years prior to the Convention of 1846, will exhibit the fact that, during those years, there was as much ability displayed in the Assembly as in the Senate of the State. And if the average ability of the Senate was at all superior, that superiority was attributable mainly to two reasons; first, because the Senate was numerically a smaller body, and second, because the duties devolving upon the Senate were of far greater importance than those devolving upon the Assembly. For a long period the Senate formed a part of the highest court in the State, and Senators were frequently nominated and elected with reference to their judicial ability. The laws then conferred upon the Executive greater patronage, subject to confirmation, and Senators were called upon to discharge greater and more important duties in that respect than have devolved upon them in more recent times. And even now, if a change were made in the Legislature, so as to limit the powers of the Senate and increase the functions of the Assembly, from that moment the Assembly would become the more important body, and the position of Assemblyman more honorable than that of Senator. The ability of the representative is not proportioned to the size of the district from which he is chosen, but to the importance of the duties devolving upon him. We are led into a natural error in looking back at the Senate as it existed prior to 1846. It is natural to regard Senators, not as they were then engaged in the performance of their duties in the Senate, but to look upon their images which are treasured in our memories—images representing those men with the subsequent growth resulting from an experience of perhaps twenty-five years in the public service added to their statures. Upon the same rule, if we should change the present system and adopt the large district system, delegates to the Convention which may convene twenty years hence would be met at the very threshold, as they have been at this Convention, by some persons who are accustomed to trace effects to accompanying circumstances, and not to their adequate causes, asserting that the large district system had proved a failure, and that the single district system produced abler and better men, simply because many men now occupying a position in the Legislature will doubtless, during those twenty years, have attained a reputation much higher and more honorable than that derived from the position which they occupy at this time. We must not expect at the present time to see as marked instances of statesmanship in individuals, or men towering so far above their associates as they did fifty years ago. There may appear to be fewer giants now, because there are less pigmies. There may appear fewer of that cyclopean race of statesmen with a single eye to the public interest, because the general average of intelligence has increased and the dwarfs are rapidly vanishing. We must remember that we are not here to establish fundamental law for some Utopia, or modern Republic of Plato, but we are about to recommend a fundamental law for adoption by the people of the State of New York, with full knowledge of the corrupting influences in society, and in political organizations. So long as public sentiment shall be divided on great questions of human rights and municipal rights, of financial policy, and public improvements, so long the people will aggregate themselves into masses and form associations for the purpose of concert of action, and thus originate political parties. For the success of these political parties the caucus and the convention are as necessary as the Legislature and the executive chair for the exercise of the power of the State. It is necessary to look at these parties as they are, and with reference to their practices. If you should consolidate four senatorial districts as they now exist into one large district as proposed, when nominations come to be made, you will find, as heretofore, that the claims of locality in nine cases out of ten will prevail over the claims of merit. If your Senators are to be taken from a large district, that district in practice will be virtually parcelled into four subdivisions, and every senator will be nominated from a circumscribed locality, and by delegates representing such limited portion of the district as at present; or if this is not done, and the entire district shall participate in the selection, the nominations will be almost invariably dictated by a few prominent State politicians, and perhaps for their own personal ends. I aver, therefore, that we will not insure greater ability or integrity by the adoption of the large district system. In the selection by a regency, overriding as they would the will of the people if they did not accept the recommendation of the delegates from the particular locality from which the nominee was to be chosen, they would probably in frequent instances select not the man in whom the people had confidence; not the man whom, through proximity of residence and opportunities of association, the people had learned to respect for the uprightness of his character, but some played-out party hack that twenty years before had acquired a little notoriety by accidental tenure of office, or by a succession of newspaper puffs. It is that class of men that, under the large district system, would frequently represent the people in the Senate. I believe that we are more likely to insure integrity in the Senate of this State by circumscribing the districts in such a way that a district comprising a population large enough to elect a Senator, shall have the opportunity of presenting the name of a person honest and upright, in preference to one who may be thrust upon it by a few centralizing politicians. The gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] and the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan] have both advanced a peculiar idea in regard to the veto power. Sir, I do not regard the Senate of this State as constituted for the purpose of exercising such prohibitory authority. Its powers and duties are in most cases co-ordinate with those of the Assembly. I admit, and I believe it is proper, that one branch should be a check upon the other, not to contravene the popular will, but to prevent inconsiderate and hasty legislation; but neither branch is constituted for the purpose of exercising the veto power, for that would be an infringement upon the Executive. And if, under the present constitution of the Legislature either branch is pre-eminently the checking power, aside from vague theory, I am unable to ascertain which it is. So long as bills can be introduced into either branch, you may as well term the Assembly as to term the Senate the conservative and revisory body. The creation of the two bodies was for the purpose of preventing hasty legislation. Now, I am unable to see how the Senate is to be a proper body to prevent hasty and inconsiderate legislation; if, as the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] claims, it should be a magnificent body, figuratively on stilts, far above the people, knowing nothing of the wants of localities, or of the demands of the public. It is as necessary that the Senate should be acquainted with the wishes and demands of localities, as that the Assembly should, otherwise it would be as likely to act against as for the people, and every check might be an act of tyranny and every grant an usurpation; and I am decidedly of opinion that it would be imprudent to theorize the veto power out of the hands of the Governor. The committee seem to have had an idea that there is corruption in the Legislature (a supposition which I am not prepared to dispute) and they are disposed to suppress that corruption in the future by simply altering the boundaries of the legislative districts. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if we should return to our constituents, and in reply to their inquiries as to what we had done to prevent corruption in the Legislature, we should tell them that we had stretched the boundaries of the districts so as to take the power out of their hands and put it into the hands of a few State politicians, they would laugh at us in derision; but if we should tell them that we had removed the objections which honest men have to occupying seats in the Legislature, by increasing the salary so as to enable them to pay necessary expenses at the capital, and that we had removed the inducements which lead dishonest men to struggle for those seats, that we had prevented the wholesale granting of special charters to corporations, which are frequently log-rolled through by large expenditures of money, that we had prohibited the Legislature from bestowing the funds of the State upon sectarian or other institutions, or appropriating the public money to any institution or public work which the State does not own and control—if we should tell them that we had headed off the tax levy that might come up from New York, with bogus claims attached, involving a moneyed pressure, if we should inform them that we had incorporated provisions that would prevent bribery at the polls and in the Legislature, and even gone so far as to declare it bribery for a member of the Legislature to take pay for any service performed in connection with that body, so that members could not go home and acknowledge that they had accumulated a large sum of money, and claim that they had made it legitimately, for instance, by drafting a bill for some one person, and arguing some legal question or private claim before a committee for another person, and so on through the category, but all for large fees—I think, if we shall be able truthfully to make such a statement to the people, they will say that we have struck at the root of the evil, and have taken the right step toward preventing corruption, and toward securing for them in the future an honest and reliable Legislature. Sir, whenever the territorial boundaries of a district are so extended as to include a population larger than sufficient to elect one Senator, the district is entirely an arbitrary one. There may be some reason for electing Assemblymen by counties, because there are well defined county lines, and because a person who is sufficiently prominent to be a member of Assembly, is through county affiliations and associations about as well known to the intelligent men of the entire county, as to those of his own town or ward. There is a reason for the establishment of judicial districts, because the entire litigation of the State cannot be attended to by one court, and a division into judicial districts becomes important also for the convenience of clients and attorneys, and for economy in securing the attendance of witnesses. But if there is any principle or reason on which to base these large senatorial districts, it should be desirable to carry that principle to its logical result, and reap the full benefit therefrom, by the election of all the Senators from the State at large. With the origin of our State government, certain ideas were introduced into our Constitution from the monarchical and aristocratic governments of Europe, and a slight modification of the legislative theory of the British Government was here adopted, and it took until 1846 to establish beyond question the correct theory of republicanism, namely, that the representative should be amenable to the people. Our Constitution framers at first tried four senatorial districts, and afterward eight; but not until 1846 did they recognize in its broad extent the principle upon which those districts are now based, that the Senator should be amenable to the electors of his district, and not responsible only to a certain portion of them. If there is any peculiar charm about the number eight, and any possible reason for such a subdivision, then consistency requires that there should be but eight Senators. The gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Merwin] stated the correct doctrine in the report which he submitted to the Convention in regard to the representation of minorities in the Assembly, in which he argued substantially that the State should be so districted as to give minorities the amplest opportunity for representation. His argument applies with greater force to senatorial districts. Under our government majorities must govern—that is the great republican idea—but it is a matter of equity which we cannot fail to recognize that minorities should have a hearing and an opportunity for the redress of grievances. By the proposed large district system you draw through this State a geographical line, upon one side of which you will virtually enact that only those representing one particular shade of political opinions can be elected to seats in the Senate, and on the other side is the reverse, only those representing a different shade of political opinion can be allowed a voice in that body. We have had one geographical line drawn through the center of the Republic, and the valor of our soldiers in four years of bloody conflict has hardly effaced it. I dislike to see drawn through this State any line which will separate the agricultural and canal interests of one section from the mercantile and manufacturing interests of the other section, because as soon as we admit representatives of one party only from one side of that line, and only representatives of the opposing party from the other side, we will aid from that moment in creating in the people a greater divergence from a common interest, and assist in making each party to a certain extent sectional. As it is under the present senatorial district system, persons representing either of the great political parties can be elected on either side of the line which separates the territory of their respective majorities. Sir, that is the only way in my judgment in which minorities in this State can be represented in the Senate. By retaining the present districts we contribute to the perpetuation of comparative harmony; by disarranging the present system and establishing the districts as proposed by the committee, I fear we shall foster a discordant feeling that may war against the best interests of the State. I believe we have been sent here by the people to recommend changes in the present Constitution only where changes are absolutely necessary to conserve the public welfare. They have demanded a more thorough recognition of human rights and municipal rights, and a certain reconstruction of our judicial system, and they demand that corruption in high places shall cease; and further than that I have heard of no complaint on the part of the people of this State, and their general apathy argues that they are oppressed by few abuses that need correction. That seems to me sufficient reason for leaving well enough alone. And we incur very great risk of securing any reform, when, by any action on our part or by any refined theory as to the elevation of the body constituting the higher branch of the Legislature, we tend directly to take from the people that power which they are more competent to exercise properly than are a few ambitious men with a large State acquaintance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hitchcock, and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose, and the President pro tem. Mr. ALVORD resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ARCHER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., had made some progress thereon, but not having gone through therewith had directed their chairman to report that fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, the Convention adjourned.

SATURDAY, August 3, 1867.

The Convention met at ten o'clock A. M., the President pro tem. [Mr. ALVORD], in the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. A. A. FARR.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY, and approved.

Mr. MERWIN presented a petition from W. H. Main and thirty-six others, of the county of Jefferson, praying for a constitutional provision for the protection of fisheries in the international waters of the State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. FOWLER presented a petition from Jotham Sewall and one hundred and sixty others, citizens of Washington county, against donations to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. GRAVES presented a petition from J. B. Washburn, and one hundred and twenty others, of Gloversville, Fulton county, asking that the Constitution contain a clause prohibiting the Legislature, municipal corporations, and town and county officers from donating moneys or appropriating any property to any church, school, college, hospital or asylum or other institutions under the control or influence of any religious denominations.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. BICKFORD presented two petitions, one from Francis A. Cross, and fourteen others, citizens of Cape Vincent, Jefferson county, and one from E. Woodward Brown and George Gilbert, of Carthage, Jefferson county, on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. BELL presented the petition of Remos Wells, supervisor of the town of Lyme, and fifty others, asking that a provision be embodied in the Constitution to preserve the right of fishing in the international waters of this State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. WALES—I have here the petition of Henry Sanford, which was presented, I believe, by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] and referred to the Committee on Industrial Interests. I suppose it should follow the report which this morning was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It will take that reference as a matter of course.

Mr. REYNOLDS—I desire to ask leave of absence for myself for Monday and Tuesday next.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I desire to ask leave of absence for Mr. Church until Tuesday morning.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I ask leave of absence for myself for Monday and Tuesday next.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

Mr. AXTELL—I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. Cheritree, for to-day and Monday next.

Mr. BICKFORD—I had before said that I would object in all cases unless there was some reason given. I like to hear a reason given. Merely asking leave of absence, without stating a reason, I want to be understood as always objecting to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair cannot compel gentlemen to give reasons. The gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] objecting, the vote of the Convention must be taken.

Mr. KERNAN—Is Mr. Cheritree present?

Mr. AXTELL—Mr. Cheritree desires leave of absence on account of sickness in his family.

The question was then put on granting Mr. Cheritree leave of absence, and it was declared carried.

Mr. KERNAN—I ask leave of absence for my friend Mr. Barto until Tuesday morning, and the question is this: he has staid here very diligently, but he has been called home by business which could not well be deferred.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

Mr. FOWLER—I ask leave of absence for Mr. Endress until Tuesday next. He informed me last evening that he received a telegraphic dispatch which rendered it necessary for him to take the next train and go home.

Mr. GREELEY—I observe that we are not able to grant leaves of absence. We have scarcely a quorum here. The Chair may consider me as objecting to every leave of absence asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair cannot consider the gentleman as objecting unless he objects on every case as it comes up.

The question was then put upon granting Mr. Endress leave of absence, and it was declared carried.

Mr. MATTICE—I ask leave of absence for my colleague Mr. More, who is necessarily called home on important business, until Tuesday next.

Mr. GREELEY—I object. It is disrespectful to this Convention. Gentlemen go away, and then send a colleague here to ask leave of absence, when they have taken it already. We need not spend our time giving them leave when they have taken it.

Mr. MATTICE—I will state, in behalf of Mr. More, that he has been here constantly since our 4th of July adjournment, and perhaps there is no gentleman who has been here more constantly during the session than Mr. More, but it is important, occasionally, that men should return home for the purpose of transacting their necessary business, and I see no reason why this leave of absence should not be granted to my colleague, under the circumstances.

The question was then put on granting Mr. More leave of absence, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BICKFORD—Sometime ago an indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. James Brooks. The reason assigned was that he was under the necessity of attending a session of Congress. The session of Congress has terminated. I move that that indefinite leave of absence be withdrawn and that he be required to attend.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will suggest that, under the rules, that motion for the present must remain on the table, because it is a reconsideration of a leave of absence.

Mr. RATHBUN—I was about to propose to debate that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It goes over under the rule, because it is a motion to reconsider.

Mr. McDONALD—I ask leave of absence for Mr. Prindle. I will say, in his behalf, that he has not been absent during the session, but was compelled to go home on account of important business which he could no longer neglect, and will be back here on Tuesday next. I think, on account of his former good conduct, he ought at least be excused for one day.

Mr. GREELEY—I object.

The question was then put on granting Mr. Prindle leave of absence, and it was declared carried.

Mr. MERRILL—To bring this to an end I move that all gentlemen absent without leave shall be given leave until Monday evening.

Mr. GREELEY—I move a call of the roll first. The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Greeley, and it was declared lost.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I hope the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill] will withdraw his motion. It seems to me it is hardly dignified in this body to pass a resolution of that description. Gentlemen do not desire and have not asked to be excused, and it is hardly worth while for this Convention to pass upon it in this way.

Mr. MERRILL—My idea was to save time by granting leave to those who have taken it without asking, in a lump, instead of going through the names of the fifty, or sixty, or perhaps ninety absentees.

Mr. LAPHAM—The motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill] is open to this objection. I trust it will not receive the sanction of the Convention. We have now adopted a rule for adjournment, which is, that one week, which includes to-day, we shall sit until Saturday at noon and adjourn until Monday morning, and that each alternate week we shall adjourn on Friday until Monday evening. This rule of business, on motion of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], was adopted expressly with the view of accommodating gentlemen and enabling them to go to their respective homes and spend each alternate Saturday. There is, therefore, no excuse for any member absenting himself without the permission of the Convention.

Mr. MERRILL—I withdraw my motion.

Mr. COOKE—I ask leave of absence for Mr. E. Brooks, who was called away suddenly yesterday on account of some urgent matter at his home.

Mr. GOULD—I was going to ask the Secretary to announce the number of gentlemen who are now absent on leave.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—About thirty, the Secretary informs the Chair.

Mr. GREELEY—I object.

The question was then put on granting Mr. E. Brooks leave of absence, and it was declared carried.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—I call the attention of the President to the fact that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair has not so found the fact to be. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the motion was evidently carried, and therefore there was no count of the negative. In addition, he would inform the gentleman that the Secretary has counted the number present, and there are more than eighty-one present.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN presented the petition of Hollis Scott, of Hinsdale, and nineteen others, against the appropriation of the public moneys to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. VAN COTT presented the petition of P. W. Kenyon and twelve others upon the same subject.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. MASTEN—I desire to present a communication from Francis E. Cornwell, an attorney and counselor-at-law, of Buffalo, in relation to law libraries. I hardly know what reference is proper to make of the communication,—I think, probably, the Judiciary Committee, for the reason that it proposes to tax law suits for the purpose of raising a fund to establish law libraries.

The petition was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I call for a consideration of the resolution offered by me a few days since in reference to canals.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Canal Commissioners report to this Convention the number of breaks in the Erie canal, within the last ten years, the amount paid to contractors, or amount of the same under their contracts, and the length of time that each break interfered with the navigation of the said canal."

Mr. VERPLANCK—Some time since I introduced a similar resolution, addressed to the Canal Auditor. On the 17th of July he made a report to this Convention, in which he states that the number of breaks had not been reported to the Canal Commissioner by the superintendent of repairs, and he cannot tell anything about the expenditure for the breaks, but can only give us information as to the amount they cost per year over and above the amount paid to contractors under their several contracts. The Convention will see, when we come to ascertain the capacity of the canal, it will be very important to understand and know how much the canal navigation is impeded by breaks, and therefore it is very necessary for the Convention to have this information. I will call the attention of the Convention to another fact. The Auditor has paid for repairs of breaks, over and above the amount each contractor has received under his contract for repairs, within the last ten years over $500,000. In the year 1864 he paid $11,405.77. In 1865 he paid $150,952.10. In 1866 he paid $166,168. Therefore it will be observed in 1864 the amount was only the sum of $11,000, and in 1866 it amounted to the enormous sum of $166,000. I desire to call the attention of the Convention to this fact, to show how these expenses have increased, and also to show the state of the facts about the canals.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Verplanck, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I offer the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the vote on the amendments now under consideration in the Committee of the Whole, shall be taken on Tuesday next at half-past one o'clock P. M."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the question to be upon the adoption of the resolution of Mr. T. W. Dwight.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I wish the gentleman would say Wednesday. Very many of the members of the Convention have leave of absence until Wednesday morning, and it is desirable to have a full house.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution giving rise to debate, it will lie over under the rule.

Mr. MERRITT—I hope I may be permitted to say that we desire, at least on Tuesday, that the question of large or small districts shall be decided when we go into Committee of the Whole. I shall ask that, when we go into the Committee of the Whole, should no person desire to speak to that particular point. I ask that we pass by that informally and take up other portions of the report to-day.

Mr. MERWIN—I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Cities, etc., to consider the propriety of authorizing the Legislature to adopt the system of cumulative voting in the election of aldermen in cities."

Which was referred to the Committee on Cities.

Mr. McDONALD—I offer the following resolution—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will inform the gentleman that it is out of order.

Mr. McDONALD—I give notice that I will call up, on Tuesday next, the following proposition:

Rule—The Convention will, unless it shall then otherwise order, go each day into Committee of the Whole, on any general or special order pending; one hour after it convenes, unless before that time that order of business may have been reached.

Mr. SHERMAN—I give notice that I shall move the following amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald]:

Rule—It shall be in order at the expiration of one hour after the reading of the Journal, to move that the Convention go into Committee of the Whole on the business committed to it; provided the appropriate order of business be not sooner reached.

Which was ordered to lie on the table under the rule.

The Convention then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., Mr. ARCHER, of Wayne, in the chair.

Mr. FULLER—I desire to submit a few considerations to the committee upon the pending question. I desire to say in advance, that I have the highest respect for the Committee upon the Organization of the Legislature, for the members of that committee and their opinions individually and collectively, and I regret exceedingly that I am compelled to differ from their report. I am opposed, sir, to this change from the single to the larger districts. It is a very great and sweeping change, and it should not be adopted unless the reasons for it are very strong and conclusive. It should not be made upon any doubtful grounds. What are the principal reasons that are urged in its favor? Why they say that the Senate under the former Constitution was elected by large districts, and that we had then the advantage of men of more eminence and ability in the Senate than we have had under the single district system. Sir, I am disposed to grant that to some extent, but not to the full extent that is claimed. If my memory serves me now, sir, there were a great many members of the Senate under our former system of very ordinary capacity, although they were elected from the large districts. And if my memory serves me, sir, it is not true that the Senate, under the former system, was so perfectly pure and immaculate as some gentlemen seem to suppose it was. I recollect very well when the Legislature, in both its branches, used to come up here year after year, grant bank charters, and appoint commissioners to apportion the stock among the members of the Legislature and poor politicians outside, many of them not worth a dollar, in order that they might sell it at a premium to the capitalists of the State, and thus reap the reward for their services. I am not going to dispute that the Senate, under the former system, did contain, as a general rule, more ability than under the present system; but I deny the proposition put forth by the committee that it was due to the fact that they were elected from the larger districts instead of from the single districts. No, sir, it was due to other causes. In the first place, it was due to the fact that the Senate was the highest court in the State; to be a Senator then was to occupy a high judicial position, and the place was sought for on that account. Eminent lawyers in the State sought a place in the Senate in order that they might distinguish themselves in that high judicial position, and did distinguish themselves in that office as eminent judges, and they have left the records of their eminence in the reports of the judicial decisions of the State. It was this which gave the principal dignity to the Senate under the former system; and unless you confer the same power on the Senate, you cannot restore it to that dignity under any system that you can adopt. Then again, the longer term of office gave them an advantage over the Senate under the present system. Experience is valuable in legislation as well as in anything else. I had the honor to be a member of the first Senate which was convened under the present Constitution, and I recollect very well that a good many bills passed the ordeal, and got through at the first session of that Senate which, by no means, could have got through at the second session after the experience of a year, especially bills for the payment of claims against the State. A good many of that class were passed which would not have been entertained at all at the second session of the Senate. The third house was too sharp for us—if I may be allowed the expression—in our greenness, when we first came together. I say experience is valuable in legislation as well as everywhere else, and that an experience of three or four years in the business of a Senator adds to the qualifications for that office. A knowledge of the business is acquired during that time, and of the history of the legislation of the State. Men become as it were experts by this experience, and it is wrong to suppose that men can become legislators without experience all at once, any more than they can become so qualified for any other branch of business. What was it, sir, that gave to the South its preponderance in the national legislature before the war? It was the fact that they kept their men in their places until they became educated, until they understood all the details of legislative duty, until they became skillful and expert in that kind of business, while we in the North were in the habit of often changing our men, of sending green and new men there, who were for that reason no match for those who came from the other quarter. The same is true of the Senate of this State. If you want to give to it a conservative character, and give to it more eminence and knowledge of legislation, you must give your Senators a longer term of office, and in that way you will accomplish it, so far as it can be done. It will add nothing to its ability or to the dignity of the Senate if you increase the size of the districts. That is not the difficulty now, it is not that our Senators come from small districts. The difficulty is to get men of proper qualifications and sufficient ability and experience to accept the office. The truth is, that men of eminence in the professions, or eminent in other pursuits of life, cannot ordinarily be induced to take a nomination to the Senate of this State. They can reap richer rewards and greater distinction in other fields of labor. You will not overcome this difficulty by enlarging your districts. I know not how it is in other districts, but in my own the office of Senator for several years past has frequently gone a begging among that class of men who are best qualified to fill it. They cannot ordinarily be induced to accept a nomination for it, and you will hold out no greater inducement to them by enlarging the districts. They will not accept the nomination any sooner from a large district than they will from a small one, and the only way you can overcome this difficulty is by adding to the dignity and eminence of the office. We cannot substantially increase the power of the Senate, and I do not understand that there is any proposition before this Convention to do so. We cannot make it, as it was before, the highest court of the State; we cannot make a seat in it a high judicial position and desirable on that account. The only additional dignity we can give to it is by giving more permanence to the office and an increase of the term, and a larger experience, and thus a better qualification for the discharge of its duties on the part of members. If we do this, we will secure all we can gain by a resort to the large district system. There is great difficulty in dividing the State into large districts. I have no doubt the committee have discharged their duty in all faithfulness, with integrity and to the best of their ability; but the difficulty lies here: that when you come to divide the State into large districts, you must necessarily sink local majorities in the smaller districts in the larger majorities the other way, in the large districts. Take the city of Albany for instance. It has now a representative. The democratic party are in the minority in this State, but they have a representative from the county of Albany in the Senate, to represent that minority; but if you put that county in the larger districts, as is proposed to be done, you sink that majority, and wipe it out, and the minority ceases to be represented here; and this difficulty will always meet you in the attempt to divide the State into larger districts. Take the county of Erie, that is a democratic county and may ordinarily be expected to give a democratic member to the Senate, but if you merge it in the eighth judicial district, the local majority there will be overborne and wiped out by the larger majority on the other side in the district, and thus they will lose the benefit of representation in the Senate, and the minority in that part of the State will lose the benefit of that representation. I do not believe it will be possible to so district the State as to avoid this. You will have to wipe out these local majorities on the one side or the other, and it will be impossible to make any distribution of districts which will be satisfactory. This is a strong objection to this system, and one which it is impossible to overcome. I can illustrate it again in my own county. There we have a republican majority of some twelve or fifteen hundred ordinarily, but it is distributed unequally over the county, and frequently we send one democratic representative from that county. The minority therefore is represented. Well, now, if you adopt the system of representation by counties, the minority will cease to be represented there; and I think that one principal reason why the Convention of 1848 laid aside the large district system, and resorted to the small district system was, that they might give the local majorities an opportunity correctly to represent the minority in the Senate. My time is limited, Mr. Chairman, and having called attention to this point, I will not dwell upon it any longer. I am in favor of the principle of the proposition of the gentleman from Niagara [Mr. Flagler]. I think that we should provide for giving a larger representation to the city of New York, and perhaps for that purpose it would be better to adopt the number of thirty-six than thirty-two. I think we should not trouble ourselves with districting the State for the purpose of representation. I think that duty belongs appropriately to the Legislature. I think we should not spend our time here in descending to these details, but that we should leave it to the next Legislature to district the State, after having provided the number of districts into which it should be divided, and I think they will do it better than we can. I think it should be divided into single districts for the reasons I have assigned, and I think we shall gain nothing by dividing it into the larger districts. I think we shall gain nothing in the integrity or in the capacity or character of your Senators. I think you will gain what you desire, or at any rate all that you can gain in that direction, by increasing the term of office of the Senators, and by providing that one-third or one-fourth of the number shall go out of office, and a corresponding number be elected to fill their places every year. In this way you will make it a conservative body; in this way you will make it what you desire to have it, a check upon the hasty and inconsiderate legislation of the other House. The proposition of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] does not in all respects meet my approbation. So far as it is a test of the single district system as against the large district system I am in favor of it; and when the time shall come to vote on it, I hope the gentleman will consent to a division of his proposition, and let us take the question upon the first portion of it first.

Mr. LEE—I have hitherto contented myself to remain in my seat and to refrain from participating in the debates that have occurred in this body on the various propositions that have been submitted to it, satisfying myself to express my views upon these various propositions by the votes which I have given. But, sir, in view of the report of the majority of the Committee upon the Organization of the Legislature, for whom, I may here say, I cherish feelings of respect, both toward the committee as a body and toward it individually; yet in relation at least to one branch of the report I very decidedly disagree. Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be well to stop for a moment and consider the object for which we are assembled here. It is not, as I understand it, to make a new Constitution, but to revise and amend our present Constitution in those particulars in which it has been found to be unsatisfactory to the great body of the people, and unequal to perform its functions as desired. Now, sir, with respect to a change of the senatorial districts, so far as I know there has been no complaint coming up from the body of the people. The press has been substantially silent. We have no petitions on file asking this Convention to change the senatorial district system, and I may state here, what every member of this Convention knows, that if the change contemplated and proposed by the committee should be adopted, we only return to the exploded system that prevailed from 1821 to 1846, concerning which there was very grave complaint, so much so that the Convention of 1846, entered upon the revision of the Constitution in that respect, and submitted the system that now prevails, concerning which there has been no complaint, with which the people seem to be satisfied, and I hold, sir, it is better in all such matters to let well enough alone, and to address ourselves to the remedying of those defects in the Constitution that have been found to exist. One of the requisitions of the people is that manhood suffrage should be recognized by the organic law of the State. The Convention, in obedience to public sentiment in that regard, has taken action. There have been numerous and grave complaints made touching the judiciary system. Now let us, when it comes in order, go to work to remove the obstacles which clog and embarrass the operations of the judicial machinery. There are complaints touching the management of the canals of our State. When that question comes up in order, let us address ourselves to remedying those difficulties. Complaints, too, have been made in relation to the management of our State penitentiaries. When that comes up let us take hold, grapple with that question, and all other questions that need to be rectified; but as touching this question of senatorial districts, I regard it as one concerning which we may assume that the people of the State are satisfied, both parties, and better satisfied than they will be after we may have spent three weeks (the length of time we spent on the suffrage question) in attempting to change it. Now, sir, from what has been already said, it may be inferred that I am in favor of the present system as it now exists, and substantially as embraced in the proposition of the gentleman from Cortland

[Mr. Ballarú], and also by the amendment proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Niagara [Mr. Flagler]. I would agree with the committee so far as relates to the length of the term of office for Senators. I think that experience goes to show that the benefit to be derived from a prolonged period of service, in a legislative capacity, eminently fits the individual for a better performance of his duty, and to that extent I concur in the report of the majority of the committee. I believe, sir, that we should establish the principle upon which the State should be divided, either determining that it shall be divided by large or by small districts, and then hand the subject over to the incoming Legislature to make an apportionment. We shall not have the time, if we have the ability, requisite to make such a division as will prove satisfactory, and enable us to remedy the real difficulties that should be rectified. As to whether large districts or small districts furnish better members is not material, nor has it been shown. It has been assumed but has not been proved, nor can it be proved. It may have happened that the senatorial body from 1821 to 1846 possessed a larger measure of talent and integrity than the senatorial body from 1846 to 1867, but it proved nothing if it be true, no more than would be proven if it should be true that the senatorial body from 1846 to 1867 possessed superior talent and superior integrity. But, sir, I am in favor of single districts, for the reason that throughout the State, there are varied interests that may be said to be local, that pertain to certain localities that can be more surely, the more faithfully and better, represented in the Senate by gentlemen representing separate districts than if representing by large districts. Now, sir, the county of Oswego, which I in part represent, located on the north-western frontier of the State, sets in on the border of Lake Ontario like a pocket, isolated, embracing the Oswego river and harbor. It really possesses no intimate relations with any other district in point of interest; so that if the system of large districts prevail, a gentleman located in Montgomery county or in Herkimer county, or in Lewis county, has no more interest in common with the interests of Oswego county than a gentleman who should be elected from Chautauqua county or Suffolk county. I hold that in settling this question we should endeavor to bring the representation in the Legislature to truly represent, so far as possible, the various interests of the State. It follows, necessarily, that a man selected from the city of Oswego, identified in interest, familiar, growing out of a life-long acquaintance with the business interests of the city, and the commerce of the port, should be better qualified and feel more interest in faithfully looking after the interests of that locality, not in conflict or in variance with other interests of the State, but in harmony with them; he could discharge his duty more effectively, and hence to that extent he is a better representative than one selected from remote portions of the State, from localities having no identity of interest. And again, sir, I hold that the people and their representatives in a legislative capacity should be held as close together as possible. Representatives must, in the very nature of the case, be acquainted with the wants and the necessities of the localities that they represent, in order properly to discharge their duty. And who is better qualified, who is better prepared, to determine and select than those whose interests are involved? If gentlemen selected thus from the small districts, who are known to the people, fail to meet the reasonable expectations of their constituents, they are dropped and new men are put in their places, and they have no just cause to complain against any one but themselves. But if, on the other hand, they make, as I doubt not they ordinarily would, wise and judicious selections, they can return them as long and as often as they please. I think, sir, that this Convention will act wisely if, when it shall have settled the principle upon which this State shall be districted, it shall hand that work over to be done by the succeeding Legislature. I will only add, sir, that I am entirely satisfied, and I believe the people in my district will be satisfied, without making any increase in the number of Senators. I do not think they would seriously object if it was deemed necessary to enlarge the number moderately, but still I think they would be satisfied with the present number. But I think, sir, that they would decidedly prefer the single district system for many reasons, among which would be found some that I have stated, and which I shall suggest, when it is in order, if it should become in order, as an amendment either to the proposition of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] or to the proposition contemplated to be offered by the gentleman from Niagara [Mr. Flagler] touching the manner of the outgoing members, assuming that the single district system shall be adopted, assuming that there shall be thirty-two Senators, numbering from one to thirty-two inclusive, and that at the end of the first year those outgoing should represent the second, fourth, eighth, twelfth, sixteenth, twentieth, twenty-fourth and twenty-eighth. The second year the third, seventh, eleventh, fifteenth, nineteenth, twenty-third, twenty-seventh, and thirty-first. The third year the sixth, tenth, fourteenth, eighteenth, twenty-second, twenty-sixth, and thirtieth. The fourth year the fifth, ninth, thirteenth, seventeenth, twenty-first, twenty-fifth, and twenty-ninth. The reason for these changes from the number indicated by the gentleman from Niagara [Mr. Flagler] will be apparent to every member. It is so that there will be a relative number outgoing and incoming all over the State each year instead of being confined to only one-fourth part of the State.

Mr. MERRITT—As the committee is not very full, and there does not seem to be a very great desire to discuss the question at large, I move that we pass over the first section and proceed to consider the second section.

Mr. BELL—I object. Let the discussion go on. It is not quite fair, after the gentleman has spoken two or three times on the subject, to cut off debate from those who may wish to speak on this particular question.

Mr. MERRITT—If any gentleman desires to speak I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BELL—I wish to submit a few remarks on this subject of the election and tenure of office of the Senate. I have not, thus far, intruded my opinions on the Convention, but have contented myself to be governed by the remarks of others, and to take their arguments, when they have suited me, as if made by myself, and unless some point has not been discussed, which I deem important, I should have contented myself with sitting still and merely giving my vote; but there are some points in this question that have not been presented, and which occur to me as important to be presented to this committee, although the question has been ably argued, and nearly every view that was possible has been taken of it. I have been very much pleased with the good temper and candor with which it has been discussed. I think from the remarks made by the various gentlemen who have spoken on this subject that there is a sincere desire on the part of this committee to arrive at the best mode of choosing the Legislature of this State. I do not attribute to any who have spoken any partisan purposes. I think it is the last question out of which gentlemen should propose to make party capital. The districting of a State is a very difficult question; and I am of the opinion, Mr. Chairman, the duty of defining the boundaries of the several senatorial and assembly districts, and of apportioning the number of members to each district, should not be performed by this Convention. This matter may be wisely left to the Legislature. That body is as fully competent to do that work as this Convention. Then, again, this duty of districting the State does not necessarily devolve on this Convention. However wisely we might constitute these districts they will of necessity be altered in seven or ten years at most, we cannot by any division make districts that will be permanent during the continuance of the Constitution. Therefore it should be left to the Legislature to make the first apportionment of Senators and Assemblymen under this Constitution, as we must of necessity provide, in this article, that that body shall make a like apportionment after the census of 1875 shall have been taken. Leave the subject to the Legislature, and we will have relieved the Convention of one of the most difficult questions that will come before us. Now, sir, if we look for a few minutes at the duties of the Legislature of the State, we may come to some just conclusion in regard to how it should be composed. In providing for the law-making of the State, this Convention, in my opinion, should consider well the powers and duties and functions of that branch of the State government. Under all civilized governments the legislative body is divided into two separate and distinct branches, each possessing separate and distinct powers, modes of election, tenure of office, and rules for conducting their deliberations. Without going into an examination of the composition of the British Parliament or other monarchical governments, showing the great difference which exists in the composition of the House of Lords and the House of Commons, or of consuming the time of this Convention by a reference to the ancient republics of Greece and Rome, I will call your attention to the legislative branch of our own national government. There we will find a model which will be safe for us to follow so far as the same may be applicable to the case. It will be seen that each State is entitled to two Senators to be chosen by the respective Legislatures thereof for a term of six years, while the members of the House of Representatives are apportioned among the several States according to population, and elected by the people for a term of two years. I will read from the Constitution of the United States:

ARTICLE I.

Sec. 1. All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

§ 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. No person shall be a representative who shall not have attained to the age of twenty-five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States.

The fifth subdivision provides that the House of Representatives shall choose their own speaker and other officers, and shall have the sole power of impeachment. So we see the House of Representatives of the United States is the popular branch of the government. And now, sir, in regard to the composition of the United States Senate, and the tenure of office, and qualifications of the Senators—Section three of the same article provides as follows:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote. Immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at expiration of the fourth year"—and so on through the section, showing precisely the length of the term of every representative in office. The third subdivision provides:

"No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of thirty-five years."

From which it will be seen that it not only requires a different mode of election, but it requires that they shall have attained a different age for members—Representatives twenty-five years and Senators thirty-five years. "The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote, unless they be equally divided." Entirely different in this regard from the House of Representatives. They choose a presiding officer from their own number. The Senate is presided over by the Vice-President of the United States. The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a president pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States." So we see that the president pro tem. can in certain events become President of the United States. From these quotations it is plain that the two houses of Congress represent distinct, and in many important respects, different and independent constituencies. The members of the Lower House being elected from small districts by the people, emphatically represent the people. By its composition it is designed to be the popular branch of our government. While on the other hand, from the mode of election, qualifications, and tenure of office, it is equally evident that the Senate is designed to be the conservative branch, and represent the States in their sovereign capacity without regard to the number of their inhabitants, wealth or territorial extension. It will also be observed that each State, however small, is entitled to two Senators in the Senate of the United States, and no State, however large, in territory, wealth or population, shall have more than two Senators. Now, if we approve of this distribution of power and responsibility in the legislative branch of our national government and conclude that there is wisdom in this provision of the Constitution which our fathers ordained and established we will follow their example so far as possible. The analogy will require us to provide for a Senate that shall represent a different constituency from that of the Assembly. We should not provide for establishing Senate districts that shall represent precisely the same population, no more than they shall represent precisely the same territory or wealth as the gentleman from Rockland [Mr Conger] claimed they should. The Legislature of this State should be so constituted, that the Senate shall, in an important sense, represent the entire State. When you have accomplished this object you have accomplished what is designed in our form of government. Now, let me inquire will the single Senate district system proposed by the amendment of my friend from Cortland answer this purpose? It simply represents one or at most two or three counties. In my opinion it will not. Small districts tend to localize the views and actions of Senators. Let a gentleman be elected to the Senate from Oswego county, as my friend, Mr. Lee, has supposed. He will feel it incumbent upon him to represent the peculiar local interests of Oswego. In some respects he might neglect the interests of other portions of the State. Now, I do not say this from theory, I state it from experience, that where the district is small, members usually conclude that their especial duties are to represent that small constituency. Large districts will, in this regard, tend to enlarge the views of the Senators. This Convention should provide for a Senate, to be composed of members who, from the nature of their constituency, will be required to take broad and extended views of the entire State; to look upon the different measures brought before that body as measures not confined to their immediate constituency, but how will they affect the entire State. How many instances of this kind have I seen in the Senate of this State, and heard Senators say in regard to measures that are really intended for the entire State, "This measure affects my constituency unfavorably, therefore I cannot go it." The practical result of the small district system has a direct tendency to narrow down the views and scope of action of your Senators to the bounds of the territory they represent.

Mr. LEE—I would inquire whether the gentleman would not enlarge the scope of usefulness of the members of the Senate if they should be elected all over the State.

Mr. BELL—I do not think that would be a very bad provision. I am of the opinion in many respects that plan would possess advantages over the other system. Fortunately we are not confined to either extreme. But I would ask the gentleman if he would elect Senators of the United States as the President and Vice-President is now elected? I only argue that large districts have the tendency to enlarge the views of gentlemen and enable Senators to take a broader and more extensive view of the interests of the entire State. Again, in regard to the term of office. I believe, so far as I can gather from the argument thus far presented, that the majority of this committee, at least, is in favor of extending the term of office. This I think a very important end to be gained. But the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] not only limits the senatorial districts to small ones, but does not, if I understood the amendment as read, provide for extending the term of office.

Mr. BALLARD—I refrain in my amendment from saying anything in regard to the tenure of office. My amendment was directed to districts, and to the territories. That was all.

Mr. BELL—This limited term of office, Mr. Chairman, is one of the greatest objections, in my mind, that can be presented to the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland. The term of office should be extended, and I would prefer four years or even a longer term, that we might get a uniform, steady, conservative Senate—a Senate that would understand the true policy of the State, and pursue it uniformly and continuously. Why, sir, the single district system with short terms has operated very injuriously in many regards to the interests of this State. I will mention one particular in which short terms and new Senates operate injuriously—in the matter of claims against the State. A complete system of swindling has been going on in this business. Suppose that one Senate rejects those bogus claims. The parties need only wait two years before they can present them to an entirely new Senate, or nearly new. Claim agents have reduced this to a system. Without doubt they will oppose a continuous Senate wherein three-fourths of the members hold over. Claims are frequently revived and brought up in some other shape, by an assignment perhaps, brought before a new Senate, and in many instances have been allowed. I know of numerous instances of this kind where if such claims had been passed the State would have been swindled out of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Claims of that kind have been presented to the Senate for the second and third time. If gentlemen will take the pains to examine the Civil List they will ascertain that within the past twenty years very few Senators have ever been returned. I think that those who have served two continuous terms have been only about twenty-six—only about twenty-six Senators re-elected for twenty years under the short term system. For the twenty years those who served two terms, not consecutive terms number three or four; those who have served three consecutive terms I think have been but three; putting all those together who served more than one term we have about thirty-two. Only thirty-two Senators out of the entire number have served more than one term during the last twenty years. This examination shows that good men have not uniformly been returned, and I assume we have had as good men under this Constitution as we had under the others. I have no charge to make in regard to corrupt practices; I do not personally know that any exist. I have frequently heard of the venality of public men, of canal frauds, of legislative corruption. There are times when the atmosphere of Albany is filled with such reports. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Opdyke] may show some irregularity in regard to members of the Legislature; but I cannot put my finger on any one and say, that man has been paid for his vote. I take it for granted we can get as good men under one system as under the other. It is a matter of expediency as to which system will result in the best and highest good to the State. This, I take it, is the object each one of us has in view. There is probably no position in the State where experience is more invaluable to a proper discharge of duties than that of Senator. When a man who is unaccustomed to the rules and usages of the Senate, however well he may be informed on other subjects, however eminent he may be as a lawyer, or in any other profession, comes into the Senate for the first session his talent and his influence are nearly worthless, he cannot make himself useful; he cannot discharge the duties of a Senator to his own satisfaction, or for the benefit of his constituents. When the committees are made up, the list is looked over, and he being a new member is put at the tail end of some unimportant committee. He has no opportunity to benefit the State nor distinguish himself. But when he shall have had the experience of one or two years he is then prepared to enter upon the duties of subsequent sessions to his own satisfaction, and to the protection of the interests of the State.

Here the gavel fell and the gentleman resumed his seat.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I am loth to occupy the time of the Convention after so much discussion has been had on this subject, and should not do so were it not that there are one or two thoughts connected with the subject which will influence to some extent my vote, which I have not yet heard mentioned on this floor. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we are not deducing the most wise conclusions from the experience of the past, and I wish to call the attention of the committee for a few moments to the consideration of that thought. From the year 1778 to the year 1822 the State of New York was divided into four senatorial districts. That arrangement proved entirely unsatisfactory to the people of the State, and unwise in the opinion of the Legislature. Accordingly, the Constitutional Convention of 1821 increased the number of senatorial districts to eight. That also proved, in the judgment of the people, and in the judgment of the statesmen of the State, to be an unwise measure. It did not work well; it gave rise, as some gentlemen have said on this floor, to the Albany regency, and the Senators were too far removed from their constituents. A reform was demanded; and the Constitutional Convention of 1846 assembled under a great pressure to have the number of senatorial districts increased. Under that pressure they went to the other extreme, and increased the senatorial districts from eight to thirty-two. And now we are told, and I believe it is true, that the people are dissatisfied with that, and think that the districts are too small and too many. Let me call the attention of the committee to the point that we should profit by this experience, and not go back and renew the fault that was committed by the Convention of 1821, any more than to the evil which existed in the Constitution prior to 1821, which was then found so wrong. I think this experience admonishes us to take a medium course between what was provided for by the Constitution of 1821, and what was provided for by the Constitution of 1846, which would lead me to the conclusion that I should not favor the report of the committee on this subject, neither could I adopt the plan which is now under discussion. The plan of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] would come nearer to what I think experience would teach us to adopt, than either of the others. It is, however, in my judgment, liable to some objections, but which could be easily corrected. I think the plan of repeated voting is subject to two objections. In the first place, it will not readily be understood by the people; in the second place if I rightly understand it, it may produce this effect, that in a district where one party has a good working majority, the minority may possibly elect two Senators and the majority only one. I have not ciphered it out very closely, but it seems to me that result might occur by the majority having for one of their candidates a very popular man for whom many of his party would repeat their vote to an unnecessary extent and so waste their votes. The minority, by concentrating their votes upon two candidates in a wise manner, could elect their two to only one of the majority. But still I think the principle of the representation of minorities is right. If a community is composed of 100,000 voters, and 55,000 are of one stripe and 45,000 of another, the 45,000 should have some voice in the administration of the government. I think the objections which are made to the details of the plan of the honorable gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] may be obviated, if we adopt his proposal of fifteen districts with three Senators in each district, by not allowing any one to vote for more than two Senators; the majority will then elect two and the minority one. This is a simple plan; it is a plan well known to our people; they are accustomed to it; they apply it in the case of inspectors of elections; in the election of justices of sessions; they apply it in some municipalities in the election of boards of trustees; and wherever it has been applied it has given very general satisfaction.

Mr. VERPLANCK — We have been some time in discussing this question, I rise therefore, not to debate the subject but to make a motion. From the remarks of the gentleman who has just spoken it is apparent that many other amendments will be made, some of them of the very highest importance, and it is due to the members of this committee that they have an opportunity in committee to move these amendments. We have been some two days discussing the pending amendment and with a view to allow other amendments to be made, I move that the motion be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard].

Mr. ALVORD — I rise to a point of order — that no such resolution can be entertained in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN — The Chair decides the point of order well taken.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE — I do not rise for the purpose of debating this question or making a speech; for should I do so I fear it would be only a repetition of what has been already said. But I do feel that I should not be discharging my duties to my constituents properly unless I uttered my protest against the report of the majority of the committee, and expressed the wish and desire to be able to vote for the amendment, as offered by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard]. There is no demand on the part of the people of this State for this great change. I believe it is one of the crowning excellencies of the Constitution of 1846 that it did establish the present senatorial district system. If we had any petitions presented to this Convention for this proposed change — if a single petition has been presented in this chamber — I have not had the fortune to hear it. If conventions have been held throughout this State, or public meetings of the people expressive of grievance in this matter have been held, I have not heard from them. Why, Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that the committee have mistaken the spirit of the times when they proposed a project of this kind. And I differ very much from the gentleman on my right, who told us the other day, in speaking of this subject, that the people would return to the old system with rejoicing. Mr. Chairman, the people of this State would spurn a return to that system. I believe the supreme power rests with the people, and it looks to me as if it was an attempt to take that power away from the people. Gentlemen tell us we should have increased ability and more purity in our Senate. Is that so? I deny it in toto. In an argument used in this chamber last winter, when they were discussing how delegates should be elected to this Convention, they resorted to the senatorial plan by way of electing them, as it was in opposition to the plan adopted in 1846, of electing by assembly districts. I am satisfied that the system adopted by the Legislature authorizing this Convention to be elected by senate districts was entirely out of favor with the people. It was decidedly unpopular with the people, and as a proof of that I refer to the fact that in its operation it was simply a nullity. Did you elect the best men in this State on account of having a senatorial system? Did you select on that principle a senatorial representation? My observation leads me to say that the assembly district system was rigidly adhered to in the election of delegates to this Convention. Whenever there was a senatorial election to be had, what was the operation? Here is the determination on the part of the people, and a rebuke to the plan of having senatorial districts. Why, delegates were elected from each of the assembly districts. They met in senatorial convention, and so strongly were these delegates imbued with the idea that each district must elect for itself that they said to the senatorial convention: "Here, in this county, we have agreed in the convention for such a man." "Very well; that shall be your man." The other delegates said that they agreed upon such a man, and acknowledged that the system of electing by districts was the true one. And so far as my observation extends that was literally carried out. The very creation of this Convention is proof of its simple operation, and that the senatorial system does not meet the expectations of the people. Now, I must say that I was greatly amused when I heard the distinguished and venerable gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. D. L. Seymour] explain the splendid condition of things prior to the Convention of 1846. He told us in that day they were all like grave and dignified Roman Senators. In his language, I think he said, each one of them was fit to be the Executive of the State. Well, now, I do not pretend to be greatly skilled in political matters, neither are my political recollections very vivid; but on looking back to that period I have heard of the "Albany regency," so called, I have heard of corruption within these halls on account of creating bank charters. Gentlemen may say they who have lived through these periods have enjoyed the glories and revelled in the spoils that then surrounded the dominant party, if you please; but that glory is departed, it is no more. It is one of the infirmities perhaps of old age to look back to the period of our early successes as a more glorious era, throwing more roseate colors around our condition when we were more prosperous—at least politically. It is only natural and proper that we should look back to those days as being better than all other days. Since that period there has been nothing but the want of progress according to these gentlemen. I claim, with the Convention of 1846, that this change was the noblest part of their work. There are gentlemen in this Convention to-day who were members of that Convention of 1846, and they know very well that there was a universal desire for the change. Why desire a change if you had such excellent Senators? Why, if the people were satisfied, and the system worked well, was there a clamor for a different system? It is, I claim, an indication that such a system did not work well. I claim that since 1846 this State has prospered as no State ever prospered; I claim, sir, and if I had the records I would show it, that each Senate that has been elected since in this State would compare favorably with any previous Senate. No, sir; I assure this Convention that any attempt on their part to deprive the people of the election of their Senators will be rebuked by them. I again tell you that now at this time the people are amazed at a project of this character. They look upon it as a kind of distrust of their ability for self government. The great trouble in these times is this, that the people are too negligent of their political duties, and if this system of large districts is adopted, it will tend to destroy all personal interest in the election of Senators, and work a great evil. And if, sir, the members of this Convention have inconsiderately made up their minds that these senatorial districts are best, I hope and trust sir, they will not, from mere pride of opinion adhere to this position, which I really believe is not in accordance with the public opinion of the people of this State.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I am in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], and still more in favor of the idea of the gentleman from Niagara [Mr. Flagler], because I think it will lead to a better distribution of districts. But I hope the Convention will decide in favor of the proposition of leaving the distribution to the Legislature; we shall have the advantage of a better census than it is admitted on all hands we now have. The erroneous census of 1865 should weigh well in the consideration of this Convention in favor of this idea, that will pass the whole matter of distinctions as to populations and districts over to the Legislature. The question, however, whether Senators shall be elected by large districts, and to what extent that body should be constituted in point of numbers, is one properly before this Convention. The single district system is much commended by the gentlemen on this floor, as adopted by the Convention of 1846, placing the delegate more immediately under the control of his constituents. That is a very great and perhaps controlling advantage in the minds of many. The advantage which might be gained to the State by a longer probation of any gentleman in the Senate is entirely lost by the brevity of their present terms of office. I would be inclined to favor the extension of the term of office for Senators to four years. The advantages of this system were well illustrated by one of the gentlemen up this morning. The able gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan] in speaking on this subject, I believe, used the word "revisory" in reference to the duties of the Senate—and we heard the intimation from him that he would support a diminution of that body. The Council of Revision was an excellent provision that existed down to 1821. If we look at the statute books of 2,000 pages, which we had last year we will find 1,000 laws that were not within reach of scarcely any individual on this floor, or of any individual in the State although six months have elapsed since they were passed. Certainly such a diarrhea of laws was entirely unnecessary. It will be found by consulting the records we have before us, that we have gone on increasing the number of laws from time to time. In the days of creditable legislation previous to 1846 one hundred to two hundred was the average number of acts. After that period, as I understand from gentlemen who were then in the Legislature, but very few laws were passed for a year or two, but for some cause or other (I fear improper influence) we have gone on increasing our laws, until last year they culminated to the number named, and were passed in most cases without due revision or necessity. A board of that character which properly should constitute a committee or section of the Senate, would undoubtedly have a good effect.

Again a council of that nature would be a very proper body to assist the Governor in his oppressive duties of examining the numerous applications for pardon. Under our present system I believe the applications amount to three a day. All of us can well understand that it is impossible to properly consider applications for pardon at that rate, and give the requisite attention to other subjects. I throw out the idea that a revising board would help the Executive in this respect. I hope some persons who have charge of prison matters will endeavor to incorporate such a provision in our amendments. I meant to say in the beginning, that I think in our proceedings we are placing the "cart before the horse." We are now deciding as to how we will constitute the Legislature. We all very well know that there is an anxious desire on the part of our constituents that many of the functions that have been exercised by the Legislature during the last twenty years should be devolved upon our boards of supervisors, and boards of town officers. I listened with a great deal of admiration and satisfaction to the eulogium that was justly paid by the gentleman on my right from Chenango [Mr. Prindle] last evening, upon the character of those boards. It was fortunately, or unfortunately, my privilege, although never having the honor to sit in either of these boards, to come into immediate contact with them during a very trying period, when we were filling our quotas in the recent war; and I must say I met gentlemen on these boards who were, in my estimation, fully competent to sit in either branch of the Legislature. I would, therefore, suggest, that until we know what is the intention of the majority of the Convention with reference to those additional powers which it has been suggested should be conferred upon various boards in municipal governments we can form no correct idea of the character of the legislation that must devolve on the higher bodies. We have very properly in the first instance constituted our electoral body, diving deep down in this instance, I might say almost to the carboniferous strata. I listened with interest to the debates on that subject. I wish the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] had given me some ideas illustrating the result of his conclusions as to the investigations of Livingston the most recent and thorough investigator of African character in its normal state. But this subject is not exactly in order, and I will not dilate further. To return, I would then carry this idea out a little further; I would go down to the eleven thousand school-districts in this State which often have many hundred thousands, nay millions, of dollars under care of their legislative board for educational purposes. In the case of the board of town officers I believe the Convention of 1846 did order, so far as the word "may" implied—and they were told by the legal gentlemen of the day the word "may" should have the effect of the word "shall"—they did order that such legislation should devolve upon the board of supervisors as was deemed appropriate. But so far from deeming it appropriate to confer that additional power they have, on the contrary, in many portions of the State been deprived of their just rights of legislation and administration. I will not dilate further than to mention what has been very pointedly alluded to by the gentlemen from Richmond and Rockland [Messrs. Brooks and Conger] in the plan of the majority of the committee with reference to its disproportionate apportionment of some portions of the State. Without going into the minutiae of different districts, I will mention that in the district now proposed to include this I in part represent on this floor, even under the present erroneous census they have allowed but one Senator for 135,425 inhabitants, whilst, as I figure out the proper ratio throughout the State for the district, should be but 115,000, showing there was some 20,000 for each Senator, or 80,000 in excess in that district to be thus disfranchised. But this idea was so fully illustrated and so well put by my colleague from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] that I need not dilate on that subject. Again, as to the extent or length of legislative districts, suppose you should adopt the plan of the Legislature of selecting by counties, my revered friend from Suffolk [Mr. Strong] will tell you he will concur with me that the possibility might arise under that arrangement of a delegate being removed a hundred miles in his own county from his constituents. I trust the Convention will thoroughly review that portion of the report.

Mr. WAKEMAN—Sir, when I came to this Convention, if I had been called upon to give my vote, I should have voted in favor of the large district system; and if I had been on the committee that made this report, I should have joined them most heartily in the report they have made. I have listened with some attention to what has been said here during the debate on this question, and I am satisfied from what I have heard that the majority report will encounter considerable opposition from the people of this State in certain localities. For myself, I believe that we should have a Senate more stable and able, by reason of the organization being in larger districts. I believe that men of experience who are known throughout the district would be more likely to be put in nomination than men of particular localities who were not known even to their localities. I have believed that the organization of our judiciary at the present time, by which we have districts larger than the senate districts, will apply equally to the Senate. We would not think for one single moment of applying the single districts to the judiciary for the reason the best men in the whole district are needed. Take our own district, the eighth, if you please. I would not be willing to be confined to particular localities for a justice of the supreme court. We want the opportunity for choosing the very best men in the entire district. The same rule, I think, would apply to Senators. But I have discovered this in this debate, while I should be satisfied that a single district system would not encounter any serious opposition at the polls, I am fearful that a large district system would. It could be very properly illustrated in the county of Erie. In ordinary times that county will elect a democratic Senator. It may elect from two to three republicans in the Assembly, but the balance would be on the other side. Now, if Erie county is put in the eighth district, there is no hope for the democrats, they could not elect a Senator, and the result would be the Constitution would receive the hostility of many democrats in that county. If you carry out the same principle in reference to members of Assembly, the body of loyal republicans in that county would be substantially disfranchised because probably the whole county would elect five on the other side. Then at the polls you would encounter the opposition of the democracy in reference to the Senate, and the republicans in reference to the Assembly. Now, if the single district system shall prevail in reference to the Senate it should also prevail in the Assembly for the same reason. From what I have discovered here, I am satisfied we are nearly all disposed to increase the term of office of a Senator. If we increase his term of office and increase his compensation, I believe we shall be able to get a good Senate. I do not mean to say we have not a good Senate now. I know from short experience, when a man enters into legislative duties he is more likely to be imposed upon in the first year than he will in the second year, by the third house. I don't mean to say by reason of being bribed, for I never saw anything of it. But what I mean is this: a man who is a new member is quite likely to meet men who are outside without knowing their real character, and they may acquire an influence over him that he is not aware of perhaps. Therefore he will listen, not knowing their real object in approaching him. But when he ascertains by experience that Mr. A. and Mr. B. are professional lobbyists then he will turn his back upon them. If we can increase the term of office I believe we would probably get out of the difficulty that is upon us now. For myself I should be quite satisfied with a large district system. I believe that is the best system that has been proposed here. But I am satisfied that system will not suit the people as well as the single district system. I have illustrated in the county of Erie, and there are other counties, along the river for instance, where upon a close contest sometimes one party would be successful and sometimes the other, but each party is willing to take the chances for Senator, and this plan would encounter the same hostility there. And so in the city of New York. If we divide the State into large districts the democracy of the State would be represented at that end of the State only. Because as you go west the chances of that party become very slim indeed. That we should have a respectable minority here in members is a salutary principle in my humble judgment. Majorities will always bear watching. That is illustrated in the county of Erie again. There, sometimes, although it is a democratic county, we elect a republican Senator. Sometimes, when it was a republican county, we felt the presence of the minority by reason of their assiduousness, and the watchfulness with which they watched the republicans. I say the minority in all cases has a salutary effect on the majority. Without them we should become more corrupt as parties than we are. I am not prepared now to say how I should be willing to vote, because the whole of the propositions are not before this body. I desire to vote for the best proposition that shall be brought forward without reference as to how it shall operate on the one side or on the other, because my party may be in power to-day and in the minority to-morrow. I hope the time is not very far distant when, if the democracy of this State are to continue, that it will be divided among the different portions of the State, and not confined to the cities of New York and Brooklyn. I believe the proposition of my colleague from Niagara [Mr. Flagler] is the one most feasible; that is, it would suit the people better than any other now before this Convention. I shall listen, as I have heretofore listened, with care to what may be said by any member. I shall be prepared to vote for what I believe to be the very best plan for the benefit of this State in raising the character and stability of the Senate, and to complete our labors here by giving to the people of this State the very best plan for the organization of the Legislature we can get, after we have listened to all that can be said on the subject from all sides of this chamber.

Mr. BICKFORD—I feel compelled to dissent from so much of the report of the committee as relates to the senate districts. Prior to the meeting of the Convention of 1846 the question of single districts attracted great attention. The question was much agitated. If there was any one question, one item of reform more emphatically demanded by the people than another, it was that the large districts be abolished, and that single districts should be substituted in their place. The Convention of 1846 obeyed the popular voice, which was outspoken and determined on this point. The system of single districts has been tried, and has worked well and satisfactorily to the people. I see no evidence that they either demand or expect a change in this particular. I feel certain that a return to the large senatorial district system would be received by the people most unfavorably. Whether the Convention shall make the districts, or leave them to be made by the Legislature, will make no difference. It is impossible to divide the State into eight senatorial districts without giving very great dissatisfaction, and without much of seeming unfairness. I believe the committee have intended to act fairly in their division, but they encountered difficulties that were insuperable. The difficulties belong to the system, naturally and inevitably. It is entirely impossible to arrange these eight districts in such a manner as shall not seem to be what used to be called a "gerrymander" for obtaining improper political advantage. I believe, too, that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] was correct in saying that the people would not sanction the proposed change, and that its adoption by the Convention would be likely to defeat the Constitution before the people, however excellent its other provisions might be, and I am, therefore, most decidedly in favor of adhering to the single district system of electing Senators, as far as they shall be elected, by districts. But while the Convention of 1846 obeyed the popular will in adopting single senate districts, they went further and adopted single assembly districts also—a change which the people did not demand. There was no call on the part of the people for single assembly districts. The people had before elected members of assembly by counties, and they were satisfied with that system, and a trial of twenty years of the single district system, in electing members of Assembly, has, in my judgment, been sufficient to condemn that system. It is a system emphatically designed and calculated to bring small men into the Assembly, and I insist that although the character of the Senate has been for the last twenty years equal to what it was before, yet that the character of the Assembly has not. It has greatly deteriorated. I am, therefore, hopeful that this system of single assembly districts will be abandoned, and I am prepared to welcome a return to the plan of electing by counties, unless another plan, which I prefer, and which I will directly mention, shall meet the favor of the Convention. I would be glad, if possible, to unite with gentlemen in some practical scheme for the representation of the minority. I had the honor of introducing a proposition, embracing this proposition in part, early in the Convention. Gentlemen will find it on pages ninety-six and ninety-seven of the Journal. It is there sketched as follows:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee No. 2 on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., to inquire as to the expediency and propriety of providing for the election of 180 members of the Assembly, and of 45 members of the Senate; 144 of the members of the Assembly to be elected in districts entitled to elect not less than three nor more than six members, and the other 36 to be elected for the State at large as personal representatives, each elector throughout the State to be entitled to vote for one personal representative in the Assembly, and the thirty-six receiving the highest number of votes to be elected; also each elector throughout the State to be entitled to vote for one personal representative in the Senate, and the nine persons receiving the largest number of votes to be elected, and the other 36 Senators to be elected in districts entitled to elect one State Senator only.

This plan embraces the single district system for a part of the Senators, and personal representatives for the rest. It will do something toward the representation of minorities, though perhaps not all or as much as is desirable. It introduces the plan of the representation of persons, as well as of places. It will enable men of talent and of great capacity for usefulness to find seats in the Legislature, although there is no local majority holding their political views. It will enable men of ideas, in advance of the age, to give a voice in our public councils, and it will not give that undue advantage to a political minority, which will be the inevitable result of the scheme proposed by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. This plan also embraces the election of four-fifths of the members of Assembly by districts, though not by single districts. It will necessitate the division of only two counties, New York and Kings, in the formation of these districts. For one-fifth of the members I propose a personal representation similar to that proposed for Senators. While I do not claim that my scheme is superior to any other that may be devised, I think it worthy of consideration, and I hope that it may meet a favorable consideration; but if not, I shall favor the election of single senate districts, and the election of Assemblymen by counties, as the best thing that is now attainable. The scheme of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is only one for giving two members from a district to the political majority in that district, and one to the minority. It would be better, therefore, to provide plainly and distinctly that each voter may vote for two, and that the three highest shall be elected. The scheme amounts to that, so far as results are concerned. As it stands it is only an intricate, inobvious and involved plan of obtaining a result which can be obtained very directly and plainly. I object to any scheme which shall enable a minority in a district to elect one-third of the representatives, because it gives an undue advantage to the minority in the State. Under such a plan, if one party were to carry ten of the fifteen districts proposed, and the other only five, the stronger party would have only twenty-five senators, and the minority twenty. That is, while carrying two-thirds of the districts they would have only five-ninths of the senators, a trifle more than half. Such a great advantage to the minority cannot be claimed on the score of justice, and I fail to see its expediency. The only feasible scheme of the representation of minorities that should at the same time preserve a due preponderance to the party that is in the majority in the State would be this —

Here the gavel fell, the gentleman's time having expired.

Mr. RUMSEY — I am opposed to the report of the majority for one reason, because it does not make a fair and equal distribution of the representatives for the first district; and although I have no particular fondness for that district, still I desire to see equal justice meted out to it. I am opposed to it, sir, for another reason. I am in favor of single districts. I do not believe for one moment that any want of respectability or dignity there may have been about the Senate for the last twenty years, if any such there has been, arises from the fact that the Senators are elected by single districts. It arises rather from the fact that their short term of office prevents them from becoming familiar with the duties of their office, and, therefore, the evil lies in that, and not in the manner in which they are elected, because I have no doubt that in every district you can make in this State you will find men qualified to fill the office of Senator and throw around it all the dignity that is required for that position, and it has this advantage, that it brings them nearer home, nearer to the people than they otherwise would be. But if the majority of the Convention shall see fit to make large districts I desire to see them made as perfect as possible, and I have an amendment which I propose to offer when it shall be in order. The only object I have in rising now is to spread that proposition before the committee that they may be enabled to judge what distribution can best be made of the districts in the State which shall insure full justice to New York and all the other portions of the State. In the city of New York, by the arrangement which has been made by the committee, they are deprived of representation for 54,000 of its population. This ought not to be. It can be remedied very easily, and I would make large districts if the majority of the Convention desire large districts by making them eleven in number and requiring that all the counties of the State should remain undivided except the city and county of New York, and by attaching that to the county of Queens or some other county, you can make two districts, and in that way they will get precisely what they are entitled to—six Senators from these two districts—which would leave an excess in the representative population of only about three thousand. I propose to send this proposition of mine to the Clerk to have it read, in order that it may be before the Convention.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the proposition of Mr. Rumsey, as follows:

The Senate shall consist of thirty-three members. The Legislature, at its session to be held in the year 1868, shall divide the State into eleven senate districts, to be composed of convenient and contiguous territory, each of which shall contain, as near as may be, an equal number of inhabitants, excluding aliens. No county shall be divided in forming such districts, except the city and county of New York. Each district shall be entitled to three Senators. The whole Senate shall be chosen at the first election to be held under this Constitution, and they shall classify themselves so that one Senator in each district shall go out of office at the end of each year after the first. After the expiration of their terms under such classification, the terms of their office shall be four years.

Mr. RUMSEY—New York has a representative population of 574,548, Queens county has 52,400, making a total of 626,949.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—Does the gentleman intend to have thirty-three Senators or forty-four?

Mr. RUMSEY—I intend to have thirty-three, the same number as recommended by the majority report of the committee.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—And you only provide for an election once in four years.

Mr. RUMSEY—I understand that. There is no difficulty at all in electing one Senator right along each year. The first one goes out of office in two years, the second in three years and the third in four years. It is not at all necessary that the terms of all should expire at the expiration of three years. This proposition, if New York and Queens be taken for two districts, gives a representative population of 626,944. The ratio for a Senator is 104,017 and by giving six Senators to the two districts thus to be formed 624,000 of the population would be represented, leaving an excess of only about 3000—in the two districts. This will do them full justice and if we are to have large districts they had better be made in that way. The other districts can be formed as may be necessary in view of the population of the counties. I am also opposed to the project of districting the State in this Convention. I think we had better leave to the Legislature the formation of the districts, and thus keep clear of what I fear will otherwise prove a disturbing element both in this Convention and before the people.

Mr. McDONALD—I rise to support the proposition which has just been advanced by the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Rumsey], and also to argue in favor of that of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Brown]. It does seem to me, as has been stated by the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Brown], that if we intend to take any advantage of what experience teaches us, we will do as he has indicated; we will avoid the mistakes that the Convention of 1846 made, while we will take warning of the evils which they attempted to and did avoid. Now let us see what were the evils that the Convention of 1846 intended to abolish. They unanimously almost, almost to a man, agreed that the old system was an evil. Now why was it? It was for the very reason that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] stated. This proposition of the people ruling is all right, but if you go too far from the people, then the between men, commonly called politicians, will so change the will of the people that when they come to be finally represented in these large districts, it will not be honestly the will of the people; but instead of the will of the people, you will have the will of the politicians. That was the real evil that they intended to remedy. Now they, like everybody else, for such is human nature, in avoiding one evil unwittingly run into another. The human mind is like the surface of a broad lake. When it is blown upon by the wind in one direction, its waves run up too far on the shore on the other, and then they return back again, until it finally settles at its true level; so the Convention of 1846, in attempting to avoid the evils of large districts, went too far in the opposite extreme. That is, it made the Senate too much like the House, as stated by the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker]. The reason for two bodies is plain. One is a check on the other. The Senate should be more fixed, to express as it were the public mind, crystallized and fixed, while the House should represent the waving public mind just as it is from time to time, and one being a check on the other thus a safe legislation will be had. I care not how you divide the State. Take the proposition of the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Rumsey]. Divide the State into ten districts or eleven; divide it into anything, I care not what, so that the political division will be radically different from the present or any other political division of the State, and thus you will get very important advantages. Suppose you divide it into fifteen districts. With regard to the western part of the State I have figured a little, and I find if you divide it into fifteen your unit will be 228,537 inhabitants, excluding aliens. Commencing with the western part of the State, you take Erie, Chautauqua, Cattaraugus, and you get 231,561. That is 3,000 more than the unit. You take Monroe, Niagara, Orleans, Genesee and Livingston, which are connected by railroads, and you get 227,127, which is only one thousand less. Take Wyoming, Allegany, Steuben, Schuyler and Chemung, and you get 229,214. You take Wayne, Ontario, Cayuga, Seneca, Tompkins and Cortland, and you get 219,377. I do not say this is right. It is only an illustration of the plan. The benefit which is to come from it is simply this. Any person living in the western part of the State knows this, that a nomination is worth more than an election at any time, because it is as if it were a sure certificate for election. A person who gets the nomination in the western part of the State, in the present state of affairs, unless he is a very bad man, is just as sure of getting elected as a man who has a pass without any liability of injury at all. He does not run any liability. He has a certain thing. So that for the purposes of the people it is fully as important to so arrange under the present state of circumstances that the people are not, as it were, figured out of their wishes. Now, how is it done? It so happens that under the present arrangement that often the congressional district and senatorial district are identical. In such case a man who is a candidate for Congress in one county is very foolish if he has not a candidate for the Senate in the other. He usually so arranges, and the candidate for Senate in one county and his friends are always in favor of the candidate for Congress in the other. I am in favor of a radical redistricting of the State, in such a manner that this political division of senate districts shall differ from any other political division, and thus prevent what is commonly called "log-rolling" in nominations. This is an important thing, and I think if we accomplish this we have done one good thing. You take and divide this State into thirteen, eleven, or fifteen districts, and the districts will so run across and divide every other political division that Mr. Congressman from one county cannot make an agreement with Mr. Senator in another, for the reason that Mr. Senator will be in a different congressional district, and he cannot be benefited thereby, and men do not make bargains unless it is for the mutual benefit of both. It seems to me, for this reason, that if we redistrict the State we will thereby avoid the great evil that the Convention of 1846 attempted to avoid. Now let us see if we get any benefit. If we take thirteen districts, or you can have it in the way the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Rumsey] proposes; I care not about the particular way you divide it. Take thirteen districts, three in each district, and we have thirty-nine Senators, but if you elect one every year we have a Senate of thirty-nine. You will have a fixed body, thirteen of them to go out every year, and we have thirteen new ones brought in fresh from the people, and twenty-six remain. In that way we get a fixed body, and we have all the advantages of the Senate before 1846. We get a practical check upon the House in any of its hasty legislation. We avoid in that way the troubles which the plan of the gentleman from Niagara [Mr. Flagler] suggests. In the present state of affairs colonization is all bosh, and will not be attempted for the very reason that it will not pay to colonize. The idea of colonizing the district which I have the honor in part to represent, with its three thousand majority, is preposterous. It cannot be done. The idea of colonizing in New York, a district where they have from nine to ten thousand majority. It cannot be done. We are in an anomalous state of affairs. The political majority in one part of the State is heavy in one way, and another part is heavy in another. But we are not always to suppose that this state of things is always to exist. Parties are liable to change. The human mind may change, and it may be that before ten years the different parties may become very nearly balanced. It is under such circumstances colonization takes place. If the Senate gets to be very nearly a tie, and you can elect a Senator in the odd district by spending about ten thousand dollars, I guarantee you will find plenty of men in this State ready to spend ten thousand dollars. Ten thousand dollars will support four or five hundred voters for four months in almost any county in the State, and under that state of affairs it is pretty important to provide protection against colonization. If you take the Senate districts and arrange them irregularly and the Senate happens to get just even, so that the election of the eight that are to come will change the character of that Senate by one; if there is a close district, there is a fair opportunity to colonize that district from the other twenty-four districts, which do not take part in the election. They can spare a good many votes, for they can just as well vote for Governor and State officers in one county as another. In expectation of what may happen, we ought to provide against this colonization. This is what the Convention of 1846 attempted to provide against. That is the only objection I have to the plan of the gentleman from Niagara [Mr. Flagler], that if the time comes when the Senate is politically nearly tied, and it is worth while to colonize, it affords them a very fine opportunity. But in the way it is now suggested to divide the State into districts to be entirely and distinctly different from any other political division of the State, you get the advantage of the plan which we have followed since 1846, and you also get the advantage of the plan that we had before 1846. You, as far as you can, avoid all opportunities as it were to "log-roll" a man into a nomination and thereby into an election, and you at the same time get a Senate that has stability and will not change every year. You also get the benefit of experience, they have three years experience. Thus, you get all the advantages of the two plans that have been so well illustrated by so many gentlemen on this floor.

Mr. GARVIN—I do not desire at this late time to make any remarks on the report of the committee, but I desire to read the following resolution which I shall by and bye offer for the consideration of the Convention and make such remarks, in reference to it, as I think proper.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Garvin, as follows:

Section 2, line 4. Strike out "one" and insert "two," so that it will read:

"The first district shall consist of the city and county of New York, and shall be entitled to two additional Senators."

Mr. BALLARD—We are now near the hour of adjournment and as we are not prepared to take a vote, I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Ballard and declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose and the PRESIDENT pro tem. resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ARCHER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I move to modify that with instructions to take a vote on the amendment now pending on Wednesday morning, as the first business.

Mr. MERRITT—I would move to amend that to take it on Tuesday evening.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—If that is the general desire I accept it.

Mr. VERPLANCK—Will the gentleman say Wednesday evening instead of Tuesday evening?

Mr. MERRITT—Tuesday evening.

Mr. VERPLANCK—If the gentleman insists upon this, I think it better to take Wednesday evening. Very many members have been excused for Monday and Tuesday evening, and they will not be here until Wednesday. If the gentleman insists upon this, I shall insist upon calling the attention of the President to the fact that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HARRIS—I do not think the Convention is in a position to take any order of this kind at this time. I hope this proposition will be allowed to lie over until the Convention shall re-assemble, when we can have a larger number of members present.

Mr. GARVIN—I think this motion should be over for the present, and the question taken at a later day when a full Convention shall be present. I know there are several gentlemen who desire to make some remarks in reference to the report of the committee, and it is desirable that on a question of this importance there should not only be a full and fair discussion and due consideration, but that every member should have an opportunity to be here and vote. I know one of the distinguished members of this Convention who expects to be here on Tuesday. He may not be here until late in the afternoon, and may not be able to present his views on this question until that evening. I think the Convention will desire to hear him, and they will not only hear him with great pleasure, but will be enlightened by his views. This is one of the most important questions that has come before us, and you will find when our labors come to be submitted to the people, and they read the debates which have taken place in regard to this very question, that it is one in which they take the very deepest possible interest. I know in regard to my own constituency in the city of New York, that there is no question that could be presented to this Convention in which they feel a deeper interest than in the one now under consideration. I have lived in the country many years. I recollect very well in regard to this question, when it was up for the consideration of the Convention of 1846, it was not only embarassing, but it was a question in which the people felt such an interest that it came very near defeating the Constitution. You recollect the vote was very light. I desire to make a good Constitution. If the Constitution is to be adopted by the people, and I think that is the desire of the delegates, we should not be precipitate in regard to questions of such importance. I therefore hope that this matter will be deferred for the present and acted upon in full Convention. If, Mr. President, when there is a full assemblage, the Convention shall hold that this question be taken without debate, I have certainly no objection. I do not wish to occupy the attention of this body with any extended remarks, but I do desire when questions of this description are acted upon we should not only have a full Convention, but a full and fair opportunity on important questions to express our views.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—My object in bringing forward this amendment was to make it clear that we should not take any vote on Monday, nor until gentlemen should be present, and not for the purpose of hurrying the vote, but for fixing a period up to which it could not be taken, and as it appears there is a disposition not to have any time fixed, and the understanding seems to be it is not to be taken on Monday, I will withdraw the proposition and now move to adjourn.

Mr. LAPHAM—I suggest to the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] to modify his resolution into one of instruction to the Committee of the Whole to take up the other portions of the report in the mean time.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] that the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] has withdrawn his resolution.

Mr. LAPHAM—Then I make that motion. I move, sir, that in granting the leave to sit again, it be with directions to the Committee of the Whole to take up the other sections of the report before passing on the one now under consideration, if they choose to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair understands the motion that the committee have leave to sit again is coupled with instructions to pass the particular section under discussion and take up the other sections of the report.

Mr. McDONALD—Under such instructions as that would it be exactly proper for the Committee of the Whole to discuss any section?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair must leave that to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McDONALD—I am informed that there are gentlemen not present, and also others who are present, who are desirous of addressing the committee and saying something in regard to the question now pending, and I hope no directions which, while it might not be a prohibition, would be an indication—

Mr. M. I. TOWSEND—I desire to ask the gentleman a question. The motion is submitted by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] to authorize the Committee of the Whole to pass this subject if it should see fit to do so, but proposes to leave it under the control of the committee and authorizes them to do so if they desire.

Mr. McDONALD—Then it is of no use. If it only an illustration of the plan. The benefit which is to come from it is simply this. Any person living in the western part of the State knows this, that a nomination is worth more than an election at any time, because it is as it were a sure certificate for election. Mr. BALLARD—We are now near the hour of adjournment and as we are not prepared to take a vote, I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

tleman from Lewis [Mr. E. A. Brown]. Now, sir, it seems to me, that we should proceed with this call; we can suspend it any time when it shall become necessary for us to go into the committee at four o'clock without any difficulty; but if we proceed with the call we shall have, regularly, according to parliamentary usage, the gentlemen who are absent, in contempt of the orders of this Convention, and can call them to an account when in our opinion we see fit to do so. In addition to that we shall have them upon the record as having violated one of the rules of the Convention. If it goes no further than that, it may be that in the future, under the arrangement which has been made deliberately by the Convention, they will endeavor to comport their views of their duty somewhat to the desires and necessities of this Convention. Sir, we have in the past week, after deliberation and with a desire to accommodate these gentlemen who are in the habit of going away from us, adopted a plan which they agreed was entirely satisfactory, and would result so far as they were concerned in their prompt attendance upon the duties of the Convention in its future sessions. Under the resolution offered by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] we deliberately agreed that commencing with this week we should meet on Monday at ten o'clock; that we should adjourn promptly on Friday at one o'clock, over until the succeeding Monday at half-past seven o'clock, and then upon that week to adjourn on Saturday at one o'clock over until the next Monday at ten o'clock, giving each alternate week half of Friday, the entire of Saturday and the whole of Monday until half-past seven o'clock to gentlemen to absent themselves away from their duties in this Convention legitimately and according to our rule. Here, upon the very eve of commencing this arrangement which was acceptable to the gentlemen who were in the habit of non-attending at this particular stage of our sessions, we find ourselves this morning without a quorum. I hope, therefore, the gentlemen who are absent will be put upon our roll as absent under the call of the Convention, if we do not proceed to order the sergeant-at-arms to find them out wherever they may happen to be throughout the State.

Mr. BALLARD—I rise to inquire whether it would involve the necessity of the members who are present remaining here during the execution of the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion it would.

Mr. BALLARD—Then I hope this call will not be made; it will deprive the members of the committees of an opportunity to discharge their duties. It seems to me that if the names of the absentees are called and entered upon the roll as absentees, it will answer all necessary purposes as an admonition that those members who are absent must be present in the future. I hope, therefore, this call will not be made.

Mr. BELL—I have steadily opposed a call of this Convention thus far, and have been willing to take the view that the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] suggests, that by entering the names of the absentees upon the roll it might be a sufficient admonition, but we have continued that process for two months and the admonition has not proved salutary. We are left here every week, nearly, without a quorum. Now, sir, I am in favor of taking some measures that will secure a quorum, and as has been properly remarked by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], this arrangement by which we are to have every alternate Saturday has been entered into by the absentees themselves, and they ought certainly to abide by their own arrangement, but it seems they do not, and if we are to continue this plan as suggested by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] it will only be to continue one-fifth of the time at least, without a quorum. I believe the time has come when we ought to take more effective means to get a quorum, and compel the members to comply with the arrangements made here last Friday or Saturday. I know it is disagreeable for gentlemen to be brought here under a call; but is there any other means of securing a quorum? We have resolved to adjourn on the 10th day of September. Now, sir, if we continue to go on as we have, we will not have completed our labors nor anything like it. This matter, sir will be under the control of the Convention, and when a majority present think the call has proceeded far enough, they can take the back track; but until we do secure a quorum I think the call had better be proceeded with.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I am as desirous as any other member of this Convention of proceeding with our business. If I supposed that a call of the Convention at this time would really result in any good, I should vote for it, but I am opposed to it because I have seen in legislative bodies many calls made and very few executed and carried through. It will result only in a long delay, and prevent members that are here, from attending to business, without producing what we aim at, the attendance of the members of the Convention. It is well understood, I think, by the members here, that nearly all who are absent, are out of the city, and if we dispatch the sergeant-at-arms for the purpose of bringing them in, we cannot do it without he himself departs from the city, and we shall not have the absent members in attendance, certainly for this forenoon. Public attention has been called to it, and it will be reported in our proceedings that a number were here ready to proceed with the business of the Convention, and organized, and were unable to do business by reason of the absentees depriving us of a quorum. I think the better way would be to adjourn. I hope, therefore, the Convention will not proceed with the call.

Mr. OPDYKE—What we desire is to make all possible progress with the business before us. It is known that Monday morning is the most difficult time for members who visit their homes to be here so as to enable us to have a quorum. I, for one, feel very lenient toward those who are absent on Monday morning; the trains do not get here in time, and many of them avail themselves of the Sabbath and spend it at home, and find it impossible to return as early as ten o'clock; but I notice since the roll was called a large number of members have does so it amounts to nothing; it is either a prohibition or an indication.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] that, under the idea the Chair has, if the Committee of the Whole are not permitted so to do they have no right to do so.

Mr. BALLARD—I hope we will dispose of this question with regard to the districts of this State.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—As the hour fixed for the adjournment has arrived, I move that we do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Will the gentleman withdraw his motion for the present, until the question is put upon granting the committee leave to sit again?

The question was then put upon granting the committee leave to sit again, and it was declared carried.

Mr. MERRITT—I would say, on the part of the committee, that they are desirous of giving reasonable time for discussion, but I wish to say it is their purpose to try and get a vote on this proposition on Tuesday evening. If at that time it is necessary to go over another day, it can. But it will be our purpose to reach the vote at that time, but at the same time to give reasonable time for full discussion.

The hour of adjournment having arrived, the Convention stood adjourned till Monday at ten o'clock A. M.

MONDAY, August 5, 1867.

The Convention met at 10 o'clock A. M. the President pro tem. [Mr. FOLGER] in the chair.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. M. GRIFFITH. The Journal of Saturday was read by the SECRETARY and approved.

Mr. BELL presented the petition of Henry Spicer, E. S. Tallman, and twelve other citizens of Brownsville, Jefferson county, asking for a provision in the Constitution securing "the right of fishing in the international waters bordering on this State, etc."

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. BELL also presented the petition of thirteen citizens of the town of Brownsville, Jefferson county, on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. BICKFORD presented the petition of Charles W. Washburne, and forty-nine others, citizens of Brownsville, Jefferson county, on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. BARKER presented the petition of fifty-one citizens of Dunkirk, Chautauqua county, asking for a provision in the Constitution prohibiting the donation of public moneys to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. DUGANNE presented the petition of Cornelius F. Varrath, John Westervelt, Horace Waters, and one hundred and seventy-six others, on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. SMITH—If in order, I would like to ask leave of absence for the day for Mr. Landon.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. BARKER—I move a call of the roll of the Convention.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Barker, and it was declared carried.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call, and the following gentlemen answered to their names:

Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Case, Champlain, Chesebro, Clark, Clinton, Conger, Cooke, Corning, Daly, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Harris, Hitchcock, Ketcham, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, Matice, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Opdyke, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Pond, Potter, Prosser, Rathbun, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Schell, Schumaker, Seaver, Seymour, Silvester, Smith, Spencer, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales—72.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Barker, and it was declared carried.

Mr. CHESBRO—I move that we adjourn until half-past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. SEYMOUR—Would it be in order to move for an earlier hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion it would not.

Mr. SEYMOUR—By four o'clock I think we would have a quorum.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. Chesebro, and it was declared lost.

Mr. GOULD—I move that the Convention take a recess until four o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. ALVORD—I hope not, Mr. President. Four o'clock is the only time we shall have to do anything in committees, and it is generally understood one or two of the important committees meet at four o'clock.

Mr. GOULD—I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. BARKER—I move a call of this Convention, and hope that it will be executed. I dislike to make this motion, but I deem it due to those who are kept here over Sunday.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—If we take a recess until half-past seven o'clock this evening, the members who are in town will have an opportunity to attend to their duties as committeemen and whatever other duties they may have to discharge; if we come here at four o'clock we may be able to transact some business, but there may not be a quorum present at that hour. Therefore, it will follow that if we pursue this idle ceremony of calling this Convention, we shall waste to-day, and those who are here and who may be able to discharge some duties outside of the Convention, will have their time frittered away, and no gain whatever result from it. I trust, therefore, if in order, we shall take a recess until half-past seven o'clock, so that we may be able to do something in the course of this day outside of this hall, if not within it.

Mr. ALVORD—It strikes me, sir, that it is not in order under this motion of the Convention to take the question on the motion from the gen-call were it not for certain peculiar circumstances which I am cognizant of in regard to the difficulty of getting from New York to this city on the first of the week. I attended last night at the wharf, expecting that the usual boat would be still pursuing her trips to the city of Albany, but I found she had been taken off and a small boat placed in her stead which could not accommodate the number coming up. I presume a great many gentlemen in the city of New York have been detained on account of this arrangement. I should be in favor of excusing them on that account; therefore, I move to suspend the call until one o'clock.

Mr. LAPHAM.—When the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill] on Saturday moved for a general leave of absence for all the absentees, I opposed the proposition on the ground that the Convention having adopted a rule of business and order of adjournment by which it should sit one week until Saturday noon and adjourn until Monday morning and the next week until Friday noon and adjourn until Monday evening, there is no longer any excuse for members of this Convention being absent without leave. I hold, sir, that in view of the resolution we have adopted that we will adjourn sine die on the 10th day of September next, there is no longer any apology for any member of this Convention to absent himself except upon an excuse which is satisfactory to the members of this body, and in pursuance of which they may grant him leave to be away. I am, therefore, in favor of proceeding with this call, and I hope the delegates here present will view the case in the light of owing it to their self-respect as well as to a sense of duty, to demand that some steps shall be taken that will effectually prevent absences of this character in the future deliberations of this Convention. Unless this can be done the result is, that the whole of Saturday and the whole of Monday are lost in our deliberations. Such has been the case from the organization of the Convention to this time and such will be the case in the future deliberations of the Convention unless we can do something to carry into a practical effect the resolution which we have adopted. Now do let us adopt resolute measures, and earnest measures. Do let us show that this proposition to bring the labors of this Convention to an early termination, as evinced in the resolution adopted last week, is an earnest and sincere one, one which we believe was not resorted to as a piece of clap trap, but is a real intention and desire to bring the labors of this Convention to a close at the earliest possible day.

Mr. FLAGLER.—I would inquire how many members are now shown to be present.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Secretary informs the Chair that there are 69 members now present.

Mr. CLINTON.—There is a great deal of wisdom in these old sayings, and my impression is that the time has come when it is our manifest duty to "throw stones." We have tried resolutions and persuasive words, and they have been ineffectual; we have tried a call of the roll, and that has been ineffectual. Now let us have a call of the Convention.

Mr. VAN COTT.—I hope we will throw stones if we pretend to throw stones. There is just one deduction to be made from the observation of my friend from Ontario [Mr. Lapham]. We adopted the resolution as to the order of business late in the week, not giving members sufficient time to make arrangements at their own places of business for the new order of things, and many gentlemen had to go away to make those arrangements, intending when they went to adhere strictly to those arrangements in the future. Then, it is to be borne in mind also, that we gave leave of absence to enough gentlemen to make up a quorum this morning. We are without a quorum, therefore, by our own action, and that I think ought to be considered. I am in favor of yielding to the pressure of these considerations for one day, and "for one day only," as they say upon the bills. But if we do not take that course, then there is another course due to our self-respect. If this call is to be proceeded with, it ought to be proceeded with to the last extremity. We have had one partial call of the Convention already; we have called names, and pretty hard names, too. We resolved to do some very frightful things, and ended in doing nothing, as might be expected; producing no effect whatever upon the attendance on the Convention. Let us stop here or go forward. If gentlemen who propose this call mean it, so that they will put every man in contempt who is absent without a good excuse, and proceed to the extremity with him—if they will not yield to the course I suggest and go with me, I will yield to the course they suggest and go with them if they go so far, but do not let us go through this idle form of calling names and putting gentlemen on the record as absentees, and make a great flourish of trumpets, with after all no list of killed and wounded, and only a large display of "missing." Let us do the work effectually, or not do it at all. I prefer waiting, but if gentlemen do not wish to wait let us go on and secure for the future a quorum of this Convention to the end of the session.

Mr. KETCHAM.—I think we had better adjourn to Saratoga and then nobody will want to go home.

Mr. GREELEY.—I desire to offer this as a substitute.

"Resolved—that the roll of the Convention be called at 11 A. M. each day and every member not then responding, shall be held to forfeit his pay for that day." I think you will find that rule will give us a quorum every day.

Mr. ALVORD.—I will suggest to my friend that, in the absence of a quorum, we cannot pass any such resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The resolution is in order, but it cannot be entertained at the present time as we have no quorum.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN.—I most fully agree with the gentleman who last spoke in regard to this matter. Owing to the circumstances that a resolution establishing a new order was adopted late in the week so that gentlemen hardly had notice of it, and had no time to arrange their business, I think on the whole it would be perhaps unwise to enforce a call of the Convention at the present time, but if a majority of the members think it before the first train can arrive here from the city of New York, when persons cannot go home and return unless they take the "owl train" to get here, I think it is premature, unwise and unfair, and I think I might say petty. It is very small indeed early on Monday morning to call the roll and insist on members being here early in the morning. It is impossible for some of them to get here; and if Judge Strong, for instance, had gone home to spend the Sabbath it would have been impossible for him to get back here this morning; and so with other members, if they went home it would be impossible for them to get here. I know of members who have been called home to attend the sick bed of relatives, and one, Mr. Develin, for instance, who has been called to attend the death-bed of the Rev. Dr. Ives; and there are other instances; I myself would not object to being fined if I was away in the middle of the week, but certainly I should object if I was fined on the roll being called early on Monday morning. I just got here this morning by the skin of my teeth. All we want to show is, that there is certainly a desire on the part of the members of the Convention to do some business, if they have a quorum here, but there is no necessity for calling the Convention so early on Monday morning. I do not think any good will arise from it.

Mr. ALVORD—The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker], says the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] would like to go home and spend the Sabbath. I will ask the gentleman to look at the record of this Convention, and see if he can find whether the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], has been absent on one single day, if he has not been here each and every day the Convention has set, and has not answered to the roll call every time.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—Where do you attend church on the Sabbath?

Mr. ALVORD—At home, sometimes.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. ALVORD—Sometimes I go home on Sunday, and every time I go home I leave here at six o'clock in the evening or Saturday and leave home again at twelve o'clock the evening of Sunday and get here in time to perform my duties as a member of this Convention, and if I was unable to do that I should stay here in the city of Albany to be ready to come here and attend to my duties as a member of the Convention when Monday morning session opened. It virtually resolves itself into this: that, under the pretense of men living on the Hudson river down below here, it is necessary for them, above all other portions of the people of the State to go home on Sunday, while we from the country are compelled to come here and have only four days' session in the week. I want those gentlemen to do what is fair and right. If they have got the power and strength, let them come into this Convention, and pass a resolution to resolve that in this Convention there will be four sessions each week, from the beginning to the end of it, and yet pretend to put their hands into the treasury of this State, and take pay for seven days' work instead of four. That is what I am in favor of. There is not a single one of those men who has not persistently absented himself from his duties every Thursday or Friday up to the succeeding Monday or Tuesday morning; but every one of them go to the paymaster and get their pay for the entire amount of the time in which they have pretended thus to exercise their power and use their time in favor of the interests of the State. I am opposed to anything of this kind. Let them say that their duties here as members of the Convention are such that they necessarily can be performed in four days, and let them so put it in the record, and let us act understandingly in regard to the matter in the future. I wish to say in answer to the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker], who, I understand, says that two of his colleagues are not present on account of illness—there is no difficulty about it whatever when the time shall come for these gentlemen to appear before the bar of this Convention, and having expressed themselves in that direction, that illness has kept them away, all idea of contempt is wiped away from them.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I will say they are utterly unable to come here.

Mr. ALVORD—I understand that. The sergeant-at-arms will report that to the Convention and that will be their excuse. I will answer the gentleman in that regard, that if they are unable to be here, and are detained by illness, that they will be excused in consequence of their absence, and they would not be compelled to be brought here on a litter even.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I was perfectly aware of that before.

Mr. ALVORD—Then it is no reason why this call should be suspended, because they are not placed in any danger whatever by the operation of the call. Another thing, the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker] mentions the case of the honorable gentleman from New York, Mr. Develin. Mr. Develin went away from here early last week, and he could have risen up in his place before this Convention and stated the reason for his absence and been excused.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—He asked me to do that for him, but I went away too.

Mr. ALVORD—Then all I have to say in regard to that matter is, that if the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker] absented himself from his duties in this Convention he did wrong to this Convention; and if he failed to do that which his friend desired him to do, then he did wrong to his friend, and he should not get up, having committed a wrong in his own person, and ask us to permit others who have been recreant to their duty, to get away without just punishment for their misdeeds. It strikes me there is no sort of difficulty whatever in carrying this call to its completion, by remaining in session a short time longer, and about twelve o'clock, or a little thereafter, there comes up a train from the city of New York, in which those gentlemen who do not desire to ride in the "owl" train or in the midnight train, which we men in the western part of the State have to do, will be enabled, and will have an opportunity, if they get up early enough, to get here in time to make a quorum of this Convention and when they have done so, we can put on record those who have absented themselves from four days per week? If a decision should be against this call, and thus it should be the judgment of this Convention that those absenting themselves regularly one-third of the time are right, I shall in the future conform my own arrangements to that decision. It is as inconvenient to me as it is to those gentlemen who are absent, to remain away from home the whole time; and if this Convention shall defeat this call, and say that this practice is justifiable, and indeed commendable, I see no reason why a part of this Convention should be held during the whole week, when by the action of the majority of the members of this Convention the business of the Convention is not proceeded with. Especially when by a motion of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], it was determined with a view to the convenience of the members that this matter should be compromised by an arrangement giving every other week to go home; it seems to me extraordinary that we see this array of empty seats this morning. I shall, therefore, vote for this call, and I will at some inconvenience remain to the end of it with a view of testing the question which I think is really involved on the motion now pending, whether this Convention will hold sessions four days of the week instead of six.

Mr. MERRILL — I would like to know if it is in order to move the previous question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair would inform the gentleman that it is in order.

Mr. MERRILL — Then I move the previous question.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Merrill, and it was declared carried.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. Barker, on which the ayes and noes were called.

A sufficient number having seconded the call, the ayes and noes were ordered, and the motion was declared carried by the following vote.

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Barker, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, Case, Champlain, Clinton, Cooke, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Kly, Flagler, Folger, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Hitchcock, Kinney, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Merrill, Merritt, Rathbun, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Smith, Spencer, Van Campen, Wakeman, Wales—38.

Noes—Messrs. Andrews, Baker, Ballard, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Chesebro, Clark, Conger, Corning, Daly, Duganne, Field, Fuller, Hale, Harris, Ketcham, Krum, Ludington, Mattice, Merwin, Opdyke, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prosser, Schell, Schumaker, Seymour, Silvester, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend, Van Cott—33.

Mr. SILVESTER — Is it in order to ask leave of absence for Mr. Carpenter?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — It is not now in order.

The sergeant-at-arms was directed to clear the galleries and lobbies and to close the doors, and see that no member was allowed to come in or go out.

Mr. FLAGLER — I wish to ask leave of absence—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair will inform the gentleman that no leave of absence or excuse can be granted unless there is a quorum present.

Mr. TAPPEN — I rise to ask if it would be in order to suspend the call of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that it will.

Mr. ALVORD — I ask what, in the opinion of the Chair, would be the result of it, whether the suspension of the call of the Convention under the present circumstances does not result in our being without a quorum again, and consequently from that suspension we would have to forego the call entirely? If the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Tappen] desires after we have gone so far, to go no farther, he is right in moving to suspend the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion, if the motion for suspension is carried, it makes all proceedings under the call nugatory.

Mr. TAPPEN — What I desired was to make this call at a time when it would be likely to have some effect. No call of the Convention can possibly bring a quorum present until the arrival of the morning train, and my object was to suspend these proceedings until the latter part of the day, when we can get a sufficient number to make a quorum. The call of the Convention can only be effectual when, as is the case in Washington or Albany, the sergeant-at-arms can procure enough from the city precincts to form a quorum, otherwise the call of the House would produce no permanent results. However, in deference to the request of certain gentlemen, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. A. J. PARKER — I think it my duty to renew the motion. In regard to two of my colleagues who are absent, I know they are now ill and have been for several days. If we move this call, we cannot get a quorum in the city, and to send to New York for members would take more than the entire day. I make this motion because I am satisfied we cannot obtain a quorum by going on with the call. There are no delegates in town who can be found to come in and make a quorum, and to send to New York or distant parts of the State would occupy the entire day. We can gain nothing by doing so, we will lose our whole time and gain nothing. I hope those present will conclude to consent to suspend this call and I make this motion.

Mr. SCHUMAKER — I hope that motion will prevail. My friend from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], contrary to his usual amiability, is pressing this matter I think a little too far. I think Monday morning is a little too early for a call of the House. I think the delegates ought to be permitted to go home and spend the Sabbath with their families, and if this call should be made in the middle of the week, it might very well be made and could be made with a great deal more propriety. But we must expect members to go home, in fact they will go home and spend the Sabbath. I intend to go home and spend the Sabbath if it is possible for me to do so, and I know the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] intends to go home and spend the Sabbath; but if members are found absent in the middle of the week, it may be well enough to call the roll, and fine those who are not here; but early on Monday morning, before the first train can arrive here from the city of New York, when persons cannot go home and return unless they take the "owl train" to get here, I think it is premature, unwise and unfair, and I think I might say petty. It is very small indeed early on Monday morning to call the roll and insist on members being here early in the morning. the duties of this Convention, and we can go on with our ordinary business, dissolving the call. Something has been said about the fact (I believe by my friend from Kings) [Mr. Van Cott] that we went on to excuse some gentlemen on Friday and Saturday, from their attendance, and he said that if we had not excused them we would have had a quorum. Those gentlemen performed a duty they owed to the Convention, in getting up in their places and giving reasons, and asking to be excused from attendance. They were only about thirty in number, but there are about eighty gentlemen who have absented themselves from their duties in this Convention without any excuse whatever, and without even asking—they have not condescended to do that much—to get up and say for their business or pleasure, or the sickness of their friends, or on account of any inability, physical or otherwise, they are unable to perform their duties here which caused them to retire from the Convention, and therefore they ask leave to be excused. Those thirty men who were excused performed their duty, and the balance have not performed their duty. I hold it to be the duty of every member of this Convention, whether we shall be left without a quorum or not, if he intends to absent himself from his duties in the Convention, that he should, either through his own act or the act of his friends, ask the permission of this Convention thus to absent himself. In the neighboring State of Michigan they have a Constitutional Convention now in session. They have adopted a rule which we ought to have adopted in the first instance. There the roll is called every day upon the meeting of the Convention, and gentlemen are compelled to answer to their names or to be excused, and if not answering then they are, under the rule of the Convention, in contempt of the Convention. If we had had such a wise and salutary rule in the first instance there would be no difficulty whatever, and we would have had a quorum during every day of our proceedings. Another thing, the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker] says he is in favor of a call in the middle of the week. It may be the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker] absents himself in the middle of the week, but it is none the less true that from Tuesday morning until about Friday at one o'clock, there is no necessity for a call of the Convention, unless it is necessary to bring the great genius, and eloquence, and intelligence, of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker] back into the Convention, in order that we may carry on our business better, and have better articles to place before the people, for there are more than eighty-one of us then here, although we have not the same transcendental ability of the gentlemen who see fit to absent themselves in the middle of the week, to aid us in our deliberations. There is no necessity whatever for a call in the middle of the week, for we have the power in the Convention to go on with our business. Now let me say another thing. On Saturday last we had the interesting matter of the organization of the Legislature up for consideration. Gentlemen had spoken, and I believe I have the record of the Secretary to bear me out in saying that thirty-nine speeches have been made on this subject, varying from twelve to twenty minutes in duration. The entire speaking talent of the few gentlemen who were left in the body of the Convention was exhausted, but in consequence of the absence of a large portion of the Convention, some seventy, I believe at that time, or almost eighty, and by the great hardship it would be to those gentlemen who have thus absented themselves, that they could not make thirty-nine other speeches, and give thirty-nine other reasons why they should go this way or that way, we here, who had thus exhausted all our brains in the argument of the question, kindly and considerately agreed that we would put that question over in order to give those gentlemen time to come here and re-hash this whole matter before us, and so it will be from week's end to week's end, and here we have been frittering away the time of this Convention down to this moment, with the most important matters yet to come before us, which should require at our hands a full and large discussion, and we have only a few more weeks remaining between us and the idea of November. If it is the persistent opinion, and if it is the persistent intention, of many men in this Convention that nothing shall be done, that there shall be nothing perfected, or so illy perfected that it will assuredly meet the opposition of the people at the polls, in regard to our work and labor here, they are taking the right course, they are taking just exactly the course to carry out their views and their conclusions to their legitimate end, but if they do really and honestly mean that we shall perfect a reformed Constitution here, such as in our opinion shall commend itself to the people, and they desire, after that shall have been done, that we shall go up to the people and endeavor to also effect the people in that regard to their better interests in the future, we have got work to do, the responsibility of which we should no longer shirk, and the time for the performance of which we should husband, under the circumstances, with almost miserly care, and it is for this reason, among the other reasons which I have given, that I do, for one, desire that this call shall be pushed to its legitimate conclusion. I know, as well as any man knows, that the simple amount of the pecuniary fines that we might impose on these men, the fact that you make them come up before the body of this Convention and give their excuses, might not operate to affect them in the future, in regard to their attendance here; but, sir, the fact that there is a press in this country, the fact that the people, throughout the length and breadth of the State, are already looking with suspicion upon the acts of men with regard to this Constitution, the fact that the people demand of us, their servants, that we should work and labor, we having been chosen and appointed for that purpose, and the fact that you will get back from the press, throughout the length and breadth of the State, their disapprobation of the course they have pursued here will induce those men, as they should, to come up to the point in the future and do their work as they ought to do it. The idea which has been propounded, that at the end of last week men had not made their arrangements to get back here, that they had before the first train can arrive here from the city of New York, when persons cannot go home and return unless they take the "owl train" to get here, I think it is premature, unwise and unfair, and I think I might say petty. It is very small indeed early on Monday morning to call the roll and insist on members being here early in the morning. It is impossible for some of them to get here; and if Judge Strong, for instance, had gone home to spend the Sabbath it would have been impossible for him to get back here this morning; and so with other members, if they went home it would be impossible for them to get here. I know of members who have been called home to attend the sick bed of relatives, and one, Mr. Develin, for instance, who has been called to attend the death-bed of the Rev. Dr. Ives; and there are other instances; I myself would not object to being fined if I was away in the middle of the week, but certainly I should object if I was fined on the roll being called early on Monday morning. I just got here this morning by the skin of my teeth. All we want to show is, that there is certainly a desire on the part of the members of this Convention to do some business, if they have a quorum here, but there is no necessity for calling the Convention so early on Monday morning. I do not think any good will arise from it.

Mr. ALVORD—The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker], says the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] would like to go home and spend the Sabbath. I will ask the gentleman to look at the record of this Convention, and see if he can find whether the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], has been absent on one single day, if he has not been here each and every day the Convention has set, and has not answered to the roll call every time.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—Where do you attend church on the Sabbath?

Mr. ALVORD—At home, sometimes.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. ALVORD—Sometimes I go home on Sunday, and every time I go home I leave here at six o'clock in the evening on Saturday and leave home again at twelve o'clock the evening of Sunday and get here in time to perform my duties as a member of this Convention, and if I was unable to do that I should stay here in the city of Albany to be ready to come here and attend to my duties as a member of the Convention when Monday morning session opened. It virtually resolves itself into this: that, under the pretense of men living on the Hudson river down below here, it is necessary for them, above all other portions of the people of the State to go home on Sunday, while we from the country are compelled to come here and have only four days' session in the week. I want those gentlemen to do what is fair and right. If they have got the power and strength, let them come into this Convention, and pass a resolution to resolve that in this Convention there will be four sessions each week, from the beginning to the end of it, and yet pretend to put their hands into the treasury of this State, and take pay for seven days' work instead of four. That is what I am in favor of. There is not a single one of those men who has not persistently absented himself from his duties every Thursday or Friday up to the succeeding Monday or Tuesday morning; but every one of them go to the paymaster and get their pay for the entire amount of the time in which they have pretended thus to exercise their power and use their time in favor of the interests of the State. I am opposed to anything of this kind. Let them say that their duties here as members of the Convention are such that they necessarily can be performed in four days, and let them so put it in the record, and let us act understandingly in regard to the matter in the future. I wish to say in answer to the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker], who, I understand, says that two of his colleagues are not present on account of illness—there is no difficulty about it whatever when the time shall come for these gentlemen to appear before the bar of this Convention, and having expressed themselves in that direction, that illness has kept them away, all idea of contempt is wiped away from them.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I will say they are utterly unable to come here.

Mr. ALVORD—I understand that. The sergeant-at-arms will report that to the Convention and that will be their excuse. I will answer the gentleman in that regard, that if they are unable to be here, and are detained by illness, that they will be excused in consequence of their absence, and they would not be compelled to be brought here on a litter even.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I was perfectly aware of that before.

Mr. ALVORD—Then it is no reason why this call should be suspended, because they are not placed in any danger whatever by the operation of the call. Another thing, the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker] mentions the case of the honorable gentleman from New York, Mr. Develin. Mr. Develin went away from here early last week, and he could have risen up in his place before this Convention and stated the reason for his absence and been excused.

Mr. SCHUMAKER—He asked me to do that for him, but I went away too.

Mr. ALVORD—Then all I have to say in regard to that matter is, that if the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Schumaker] absented himself from his duties in this Convention he did wrong to this Convention; and if he failed to do that which his friend desired him to do, then he did wrong to his friend, and he should not get up, having committed a wrong in his own person, and ask us to permit others who have been recreant to their duty, to get away without just punishment for their misdeeds. It strikes me there is no sort of difficulty whatever in carrying this call to its completion, by remaining in session a short time longer, and about twelve o'clock, or a little thereafter, there comes up a train from the city of New York, in which those gentlemen who do not desire to ride in the "owl" train or in the midnight train, which we men in the western part of the State have to do, will be enabled, and will have an opportunity, if they get up early enough, to get here in time to make a quorum of this Convention and when they have done so, we can put on record those who have absented themselves from is competent on the part of the Convention now present here to excuse portions of those gentlemen, if they see fit to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. ALVORD — I then ask consent to withdraw my motion.

The resolution was withdrawn.

Mr. ALVORD — I ask that the President of this Convention — whom we all know went away from here very ill and who has also written here that he continues to be quite ill, but is slowly recovering and if possible will be with us to-morrow morning — be excused for his non-attendance this morning.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared carried.

Mr. A. J. PARKER — I ask that Mr. Cassidy and Mr. Roy be excused, for I know they are both ill and unable to attend. They have been detained for a number of days. I have seen Mr. Cassidy myself, and I know that he is sick, and I ask, therefore, that he be excused.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Cassidy, and it was declared carried.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Roy, and it was declared carried.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT — I ask an excuse for Mr. Livingston, of Kings county. He was called away to attend to the distribution of some trust funds, which it was necessary to send out by the Saturday's steamer to Europe, and asked me to apply for an excuse for him.

Mr. ALVORD — I hope that will not obtain, because if it was to be sent out by the Saturday's steamer, that steamer has already gone.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair will inform the gentleman that Mr. Livingston is absent on leave.

Mr. SCHUMAKER — I move that Mr. Develin be purged of contempt. I neglected to make Mr. Develin's excuse in time, but he exhibited, I think, to the President, a telegram showing that Dr. Ives was sick, and I move that Mr. Develin be purged of contempt.

Mr. BICKFORD — I want to know whether he was a relative of Mr. Develin?

Mr. SCHUMAKER — Suppose you telegraph to find out. I was shown a telegram from a gentleman to Mr. Develin, which read this way: "Your friend, Dr. Ives, is dying." I suppose if a man leaves this Convention to attend the bedside of his dying friend, he can be excused. That is all I have to say. Whether he is a full-blooded cousin or not, I do not know.

Mr. DALY — I beg leave to say on that subject that Mr. Develin, to my personal knowledge, is a very intimate personal friend of the gentleman who is lying on his death bed, and I hope this Convention will consider that particular case a sufficient reason why he should be excused.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Develin, and it was declared carried.

Mr. LUDINGTON — I ask that my colleague, Mr. Houston, be purged of the contempt that he may be in. It is well known that few delegates of this Convention have been more punctual in this Convention than he. I know he has a wife in very ill health, so much so that he, at a great deal of sacrifice, has made it a point to visit his home every week during the sessions of this Convention, and I know it must be in consequence of her illness that he is not here at this hour, and for that reason I ask that he be excused.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Houston, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SILVESTER — I ask that Mr. Carpenter, of Dutchess, be excused. He is a United States Assessor of that district, and his official business rendered it necessary for him to go home on Saturday last. He will undoubtedly be here on the first train that can reach here, and for that reason I ask that he be excused.

Mr. ALVORD — I hope he will not be excused if he is a United States Assessor. He has no business to take his position here as a member of the Convention without understanding he was to perform certain duties. He cannot serve two masters.

Mr. SILVESTER — I do not know that he has attempted to serve two masters. He has endeavored to do his duty here, and he left here on Saturday, expecting to be here by the first train this morning, and will undoubtedly be here; and he had no idea probably, like other members here, that any call of the house would be made at so early an hour in the morning, especially as we meet at ten o'clock instead of eleven.

Mr. KETCHAM — I rise to a question of order, that we cannot hear anything for the dumping of coal in the cellar, and I hope the dumping of the coal in the cellar will be suspended.

Mr. HALE — I would say in behalf of Mr. Carpenter, that few members have been more constant in their attendance on this body than he has, and I have no doubt his absence is necessary at this time.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Carpenter, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 30 to 24.

Mr. GREELEY — I desire to say in behalf of Mr. Martin I. Townsend that he left this city at the close of our session on Saturday to visit a relative in the town of Great Barrington, and he certainly will be as early as he can be in his place, I suppose at one o'clock. I know he intended to return as soon as possible, and I think it ought to be known why he is absent.

Mr. ALVORD — Do I understand the gentleman as saying that he is absent on a visit?

Mr. GREELEY — He went to see a relative.

Mr. SEYMOUR — I wish to say in connection with the absence of Mr. Townsend, that I know he intended to be here on this day as soon as he can arrive. I know that he went to see a relative, a member of the family who was taken to the country on account of ill health. I move that he be excused.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT — I wish to make a motion. We have, as I understand, voted to excuse Mr. Carpenter of Dutchess for, as I conceive, no excuse whatever, and no pretense or excuse — simply that he was absent, and it was conjectured he might be away on important business; and I think, after that, we cannot refuse to excuse any member, and I move, therefore, that all members who under this call would be in contempt, shall be excused.

gone away with the expectation that there would be no enforcement of the resolution which they themselves deliberately agreed to and passed on Friday last, is all the merest nonsense in the world. These men have again and again and again gone away, and they will do it till the very last end of the sessions of this Convention, unless we determine clearly and unmistakably by our action, that what they have been doing is wrong, and we shall hold them up to the disapprobation of the people of this State.

Mr. CORNING—I do not rise, sir, to make a speech, but simply, if it be in order, to move that the call be suspended, and upon that I ask the previous question.

The question was then put on ordering the previous question, and, on a division, it was declared carried by a vote of twenty-eight to sixteen.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the question to be on the motion to suspend the call of the Convention.

Mr. LAPHAM—Is that motion in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that it is.

Mr. LAPHAM—The Convention has just taken a vote on the same subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—But some business has taken place since. The galleries have been cleared and the roll has been called.

The ayes and noes were called for on the motion to suspend the call of the Convention. A sufficient number having seconded the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Corning, and it was declared lost.

Mr. MERRILL—I move that the call of the absentees be proceeded with, to find out who are absent. I desire to inquire whether it would be within the province of those present to pass a resolution putting absent members in contempt before we obtain a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that as soon as a quorum is obtained the Convention can make some special direction.

Mr. MERRITT—If my memory serves me, a full Convention gave authority to the minority, in case a call was made, to impose all the penalties that would be imposed by the full Convention, and I would ask whether that could be done?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—There was such a resolution offered, but the Chair is not aware that it was adopted.

Mr. LAPHAM—I call the attention of the Chair to the thirty-fourth rule. The whole subject is regulated by that rule. It gives to the members present full power.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call of the absentees.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would like to know whether the call of the absentees includes all that are absent, or only those who are absent without leave.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Only those absent without leave.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the names of the absentees, and the following gentlemen were found to be absent:

Messrs. C. L. Allen, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Beadle, Beals, Burrill, Carpenter, Cassidy, Cheritree, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Corbett, Develin, Eddy, Everts, Farnum, Fowler, Francis, Frank, Fullerton, Garvin, Gerry, Grom, Hardenburgh, Hiscock, Houston, Huntington-Hutchins, Jarvis, Kernan, Larremore, Law, A. R. Lawrence, Lee, Lowrey, Magee, Mastep, McDouald, Monell, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Paige, President, Robertson, Rogers, Rolfe, Roy, A. D. Russell, Schoonmaker, Sheldon, Sherman, Stratton, Tilden, M. I. Townsends, Tucker, Weed, Wickham, Williams, Young—62.

Mr. ALVORD—I move that the warrant of this Convention, signed by the President, be issued to the sergeant-at-arms with instructions to proceed within the limits of this city and endeavor to get enough to make a quorum.

Mr. KRUM—I move to amend by striking out the city of Albany and inserting the city and State of New York.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I wish to inquire whether any excuse can now be received.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that an excuse may be received.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I hope the President will not order the issuing of the warrant until we shall hear excuses by some members present in regard to some members who are absent.

Mr. LAPHAM—I propose an amendment to the resolution, that the members absent on this call without leave forfeit their pay for the day, unless a satisfactory excuse be given.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that that cannot be entertained, inasmuch as there is no quorum present. The Chair construes rule 34 differently from the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], to wit: that it only in the first instance empowers the minority to secure a quorum.

Mr. LAPHAM—Rule 34 is as follows: "In cases of the absence of a quorum at any session of the Convention, the members present may take such measures as they may deem necessary to secure the presence of a quorum, and may inflict such censure as they may deem just on those who, on being called on for that purpose, shall render no sufficient excuse for their absence."

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Censure can be inflicted only on those who, being called on, render no sufficient excuse. They must first be brought in before they can be called on for an excuse.

Mr. DALY—I hope this motion will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair rules it out of order.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I move, as an amendment to the amendment which has just been proposed, the following exceptions: "Except as to members absent for whom excuses satisfactory to the Convention shall be given."

Mr. ALVORD—With the consent of the gentleman from Schoharie [Mr. Krum], who has amended my proposition, and for the purpose, as I understand the President to rule, if there are any who, within the knowledge of members, should be excused, I will withdraw it for the purpose of having such excuses offered for those who shall be excused before the warrant is issued. I understand the President to say that now these gentlemen, being in contempt prima facie, & fact could have been made, except by way of an excuse for the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], and I should like to know whether any member of this Convention will grant an excuse upon such grounds.

Mr. SILVESTER—I hope the motion of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] may prevail, and I think, especially under the circumstances this morning, it would be eminently proper that we should grant universal amnesty in this case.

Mr. FULLER—I hope the motion of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] will not prevail. I was not in favor of continuing this call; I did not think it was best; but having begun it, I think we are bound to go through with it. I would not make boy's play of this business, but having commenced, we should carry it through and make it effectual.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I understand that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] has gone to visit a relative who was sick, and I understand the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] to say that was no good reason. I think that is a very good reason, and somewhat analogous to the case of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin] who was excused upon that ground.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I would state in relation to Mr. Townsend, that he went away on Saturday, after the close of our session, to visit a member of his family, a relative who was taken into the country on account of ill health under the advice of a physician, and I know he has gone to visit that person.

Mr. ALVORD—I would like to know how far it is to Berkshire county? Looking around me I see a number of others from the gentleman's county who are absent, and I would inquire if he can make excuses for them.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I will state to the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], that when the case of my other colleagues comes up, I will be prepared, if they have any good excuse to present it to the Convention; but I desired to state this in reference to Mr. Townsend, as I believe he has a good excuse.

Mr. OPDYKE—I hope the motion of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] will prevail. I voted against entering upon this call in the conviction that it would do no good, and only waste our time; but a majority of the Convention differed from me in judgment, and I have no doubt they considered the subject more wisely than I did; and now, having commenced the call, it seems to me if we stop here it will be trifling, and show an infirmity of purpose and a vacillation on the part of the Convention which would not redound to its credit, and I hope it will be persisted in.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I made this motion because I thought I saw in the precedent which had been set by the Convention, a disposition to excuse everybody, with or without an excuse; but I see now a gratifying intention on the part of members to take another course, and I therefore withdraw the motion I made.

The question was then put on excusing Mr. M. I. Townsend, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 33 to 22.

Mr. HALE—I move that this call be suspended until half-past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order, that if the call is suspended until half-past seven o'clock, it is suspended entirely.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of that opinion.

Mr. ALVORD—And, therefore, no motion can be entertained except to suspend the call.

Mr. HALE—I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. ROOT—I ask that Mr. Lee be excused. He received a telegram that a member of his family was very ill and he must return home.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair would state to the Convention that he saw Mr. Lee on his way to the cars, and he informed him he had just received a telegram saying that his brother-in-law was dead.

The question was then put upon excusing Mr. Lee, and it was declared carried.

Mr. TAPPEN—I move Mr. Cochran be excused. He has been a most attentive member of this Convention, having been present every day from the 4th of June, and not absent a single day, and it would be unjust to him, considering his prompt and faithful attendance, for this Convention to now say that he is willfully absent.

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to ask the gentleman whether his colleague is not now in this city? I am so informed.

Mr. TAPPEN—I say that from some unforeseen cause he is not in his seat this morning.

Mr. HARRIS—I did not desire to take any part in this farce, but I will state for the information of the Convention that Mr. Cochran is at the door. He arrived just too late to get in and is waiting to be admitted whenever the Convention shall see fit to receive him.

Mr. POND—I move that the absentees who have not been excused be excused—in other words, I wish to renew the motion of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], and in support of that motion I will say as several gentlemen here have said they opposed the original motion for the call; but since it was carried they have changed their minds and are now in favor of enforcing a call of the house. I can say that I opposed the original motion for a call and I still am of the opinion that it is better now to suspend it and better to take the back track just as quick as we can and thus extricate ourselves from the difficulty we are now in. I think, sir, it is unwise and improper to make this call of the Convention on Monday morning and at this hour. I do not believe it is right exactly to hold members of this Convention to such a rigid rule that they shall stay in the city of Albany over Sunday, when they can by the facilities afforded by the public means of conveyance go home and spend the Sunday at home, and arrive here on Monday at such a time as will not prevent a session on the evening of that day. I think we ought to allow to members of this Convention that privilege, and I disagree entirely with my friend from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] who wants to hold to such a rigid rule as to make a call of this Convention so early Monday morning and to put every member in countment who is not here. I think my friend is a little too rigid, because he has heretofore been in

Mr. ALVORD—I ask the ayes and noes on that question.

Mr. DALY—There are several gentlemen of the New York delegation who are detained, to my knowledge, by important business, but I do not feel justified in asking for their excuse for that reason. I have had some experience in past years of the effect of a motion of this kind, and my objection to it is, that it fails in obtaining the object aimed at. I entertain quite as earnestly as the other gentlemen in this Convention the desire that such measures should be taken as will secure the attendance of members, but the practical effect of a call of the House can extend no further than the territorial limits of this city. As has been already suggested, to send the sergeant-at-arms all over the State would be followed by no other result, but that of compelling the members to remain in the position they are now in until the officer returns. There is also this additional consideration. It has never yet been determined that a body of this character has the power to order an arrest at all. In my opinion it has, but the existence of any such power has been doubted by very good lawyers. I would add the still further consideration that this is at a season of the year when most persons are at leisure. Our duties during the discussion upon the suffrage question were exceedingly arduous—I speak of my own personal experience. We attended here for four days in the week, and we went into committee at nine o'clock in the morning and then attended three sessions of this body extending to nine o'clock in the evening, an amount of physical labor exceedingly severe, and much more than is usual for the discharge of any ordinary public duty, and it is very natural that gentlemen should desire to get away for the short recreation, which will be afforded by casual visits to their homes during a part of Saturday and the whole of Sunday. I supposed when the hour was fixed at one o'clock for adjournment, it was with a view of enabling gentlemen to leave early, and it will be but reasonable to allow sufficient time for them to return without compelling them to travel upon the Sabbath. In my judgment, a much more effectual and moral means of securing the attendance of members, would be to publish in the newspapers, on occasions like this, the names of members who are absent upon the call of the roll, and this would have some effect. My objection to this motion is that it is not practicable—that it will not accomplish the purpose which it is intended to effect. I therefore, as the result of the motion already passed upon has shown an unwillingness on the part of the Convention to suspend the call, shall support the motion of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], that all persons absent be excused. I think when we propose, hereafter, to have a call of the Convention, we should fix our meeting on Monday at such a time as will allow those who leave on Saturday a reasonable time to return.

Mr. GREELEY—From the city of New York, there are two modes of reaching this place every Sunday evening. You can start by boat at six P. M. or by a train—which has good sleeping-cars attached—at eleven P. M., and arrive here by seven o'clock in the morning. The larger portion of the absentees are from that end of the State. If this Convention chooses to give up the Monday session, very well. If it chooses to make a later hour of meeting on that day, very well. But to abandon this proceeding now is to publish to the State that we do not care whether members are here or not, but that they can take their pay, go off and practice law, or sit as judges in court, or act as commissioners or collectors of internal revenue, and come back here whenever it is convenient, and not (as they think) inconsistent with their duties elsewhere. It does seem to me that if we abandon this proceeding now we abandon all hope of keeping a quorum here, except when it shall suit the convenience of members, and I therefore hope that this Convention will not abandon this call, upon which we have entered, but will carry it out to some practical result.

Mr. TAPPEN—I shall have, sir, to take very high moral grounds in responding to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. He says that gentlemen can leave the city of New York on Sunday evening, and arrive here Monday morning. Well, sir, the Sabbath does not terminate so early in the day, and I do not like to compel my associates who reside in that or any other portion of the State to violate their moral feelings and conscientiousness to travel upon the Sabbath in order to reach the city on the Monday following. With regard to some remarks which have been made in this chamber by other gentlemen, it seems to be desired to fix upon the public mind the idea that all the absentees come from that part of the State where the county of Kings and the city of New York are located. In looking around this chamber, sir, I see vacant seats whose usual occupants are from all parts of the State. I have in my mind's eye particularly the case of one gentleman who I think had taken a house in the city of Albany, and who had been here every day from the 4th of June to this time, even staying in the city with his family during the recess early in July, but from some unforeseen cause he is absent this morning; and I think it would be a piece of injustice in regard to him as well as to others to vote upon them the censure of this Convention. I trust this motion will prevail, and that all will be excused, but if it does not prevail I hope that this Convention will excuse my colleague from Westchester [Mr. Cochran], whose punctual attendance must have been noticed by every member of this body.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I was surprised to hear the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] oppose the motion which I had the honor to make, when but a few moments before he asked for an excuse for a very distinguished member of this Convention upon no other ground than that he had left this city suddenly last week for the purpose of making a visit to a relation in the county of Berkshire in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. GREELEY—I beg to correct the gentleman. I did not ask for an excuse, I simply stated the fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Westchester expressly said he merely stated the fact.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—But no reference to the gentleman from Wayne [Mr. Ketcham] will not prevail. I ask the gentlemen in this house in Convention that they do not allow this thing to be characterized as a farce. It is due to the dignity and the authority of this Convention that this call shall be maintained at least until we have a quorum. I shall certainly have shame upon my cheek if it be abandoned at this time.

Mr. SMITH—I hope this motion will not prevail. It is the first time that I have voted in favor of a measure of this kind, but having gone thus far, it seems to me we cannot preserve our dignity and self-respect, and secure in the future the attendance of members, if we retrace our steps. There has been enough of Chinese thunder on this subject already. When members accepted a nomination to this body, they pledged themselves that if elected they would perform their duties as delegates, and would attend its sessions. But it is well known to members who are present, that many who have been elected to this body have absented themselves from day to day, whenever their convenience or business called them away. We have repeatedly found ourselves without a quorum, and been unable to proceed with our business. There has been, as suggested by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Van Cott], a flourish of trumpets, but it has never amounted to anything. We have substantially made proclamation by our proceedings on this subject that we were not in earnest, and it has brought the Convention into contempt. Absentees pay no attention to us, or our proceedings against them. I have come here myself repeatedly, from a sense of duty, and under threatened calls of the Convention, at considerable personal inconvenience, and to the neglect of other duties, when there has not been a quorum, and we were unable to proceed with the business of the Convention. The public are uneasy, and the entire body has to suffer for the delinquencies of these members who constantly absent themselves. It seems to me that, having entered upon this call with a view of enforcing our rules, if we desire to maintain our self respect, and secure the attendance of members in the future, we must not retrace our steps. If we hesitate now, and stop with a mere flourish of trumpets as on former similar occasions, all future efforts to enforce our rules will be vain. I insist that we shall maintain our position and proceed with this call. If absent members have good excuses, the Convention will receive them; but they should not be permitted to absent themselves with impunity, delay the proceedings of the Convention, and bring the whole body into contempt.

Mr. MERRILL—I presume that this Convention have made up their minds upon this question, and I therefore move the previous question.

The question was then put upon ordering the previous question and it was declared carried.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Ketcham and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Baker, Ballard, Bowen, Conger, Daly, Hale, Ketcham, Krum, Mattice, A. J. Parker, Pond, Schell, Schumaker, Silvester, Strong, S. Townsend—16.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Barker, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Case, Champlain, Chesabro, Clark, Clinton, Cooke, Corning, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Hitchcock, Kinney, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence Ludington, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Opdyke, C. E. Parker, Potter, Prosser, Rathbun, Root, Rumsey, A. D. Russell, Seaver, Seymour, Smith, Spencer, Tappen, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales—54.

Mr. ALVORD—For the purpose of bringing this matter to a close, it seems to me that we have gone far enough now in the direction in which gentlemen have gone to determine that this call shall be proceeded with. I, therefore, take the liberty to move that all persons not now within the bar of this Convention and not excused, be declared in contempt, and that the warrant of the President—

Mr. SEYMOUR—Will the gentleman permit me to present an excuse?

Mr. ALVORD—No, I will not—and that the warrant of this Convention by its President be issued and the sergeant-at-arms be directed to take the warrant and confine its execution to the limits of the city of Albany for the present, as I understand, within a few moments the cars will arrive, which will give us a sufficient number to make a quorum of members in attendance upon the duties of this Convention, and upon this question, I move the previous question.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I rise to a point of order—that this Convention was considering and had decided to hear excuses which might be offered for gentlemen who are absent, and we were proceeding with that, and which was the order of business which was unfinished, and it should be finished before the motion of the gentleman from Onondaga is put.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that the point of order would have been well taken if earlier made, but the present order of business having been entered upon cannot be superseded except by a reconsideration.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I wish to present an excuse—

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order—that no vote was taken by this Convention that excuses should be made, but the Chair decided upon the suggestion of the gentleman that anybody in the Convention could rise up and make excuses, but there was no vote taken at all, and, therefore, it is not any order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Onondaga is correct, and the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I still rise to a point of order. I wish to state to the President this state of facts upon a suggestion made—

Mr. ALVORD—I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I am speaking to a point of order. Upon the suggestion made to the President we did adopt that order of business, and by consent of the Convention it was adopted, which is equivalent to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair understands the point of order, but must overrule it.

the practice of administering those rules and he has therefore got into the habit of enforcing them very stringently. I do not sympathize with him at all in this respect. I see no object in a call of this Convention on Monday at such an early hour. I say it does not comport with the dignity of this Convention, without any notice to members to that effect, to fine or hold every man in contempt who is not here at ten o'clock on Monday morning. It has been well said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly] that this Convention passed a resolution late in the week for adjourning on Saturday for the very purpose of allowing members the privilege of going home, and I think if we permit them to go home on Saturday, it is wrong not to permit them to come back here on Monday morning without requiring on their part a breach of the law that forbids traveling upon the Sabbath. It is proper that they should have an opportunity to reach their places here in this Convention at a proper time and as soon as they can on Monday morning, and I am opposed to this whole matter of a call at this time, and I am not convinced by any of the reasons which have been put forth that it is proper. I think it is unfair and unjust to those members who are absent, and I also hope they will be excused for the further reason which have been assigned, that practically it will be out of our power to get them here by enforcing this call any sooner than they will come without it. If you send the sergeant-at-arms for them, and we stay here until they get back, you will find that every gentleman will render a good excuse for his absence, and will be excused, and that we shall have spent the time and the call in vain.

Mr. VAN COTT—I hope this resolution will not prevail. We were in a position this morning in which we could have passed over in silence the absence of those members, and I was in favor, under the circumstances, of taking no notice of it. I think, however, we are no longer in that position, and I hope the gentlemen who determined upon a call of the Convention will now have the courage to proceed with it to the end. I was opposed to the call while the matter was in the choice of the Convention; but I am now in favor of going to the extremity of the call. We certainly ought to have it in our power to have a quorum here to proceed with our business; but we shall never have it in our power morally to call this Convention and enforce the call if we stop again to-day. I was here a fortnight ago when it was attempted and then we stopped in the midst of the call, and it proved utterly ineffectual. I am here again to-day, and it is proposed to stop again. These gentlemen took advantage of our former failure, and they will take advantage of this. The majority who ordered the call are here, and if they have the courage can proceed with it, and gentlemen who opposed it are now added to the majority, and we now insist that the self-respect of this Convention and its authority over these members shall be maintained, and after we have gone to the point where gentlemen can make their own excuses in person, I shall be glad to listen to their excuses with indulgence. Let us go to that point for self-respect's sake, for the authority of the Convention's sake, and for the sake of the very important trusts which are committed to us, and in the discharge of which we cannot proceed unless we have this control over the presence of the members of this Convention.

Mr. TAPPEN—I desire to renew my motion that Mr. Cochran be excused, and move that he be now admitted.

Mr. FIELD—I understand that Mr. Cochran has been in town all the time, and was here half an hour before the Convention met, and it strikes me if Mr. Cochran is admitted he can better make his own excuse than any other person can do it for him.

Mr. OPDYKE—I suppose it would be in accordance with the rules if I offer an amendment that Mr. Cochran be now admitted and asked for his excuse.

Mr. POND—I will withdraw my motion until that is done.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would, if in order, move that the doors be opened and all who are ready to come in be permitted to come in and make excuses if they can.

Mr. ALVORD—I would ask the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Opdyke] what they mean by opening the doors and letting all come in. If they make the proposition that the sergeant-at-arms be directed to go outside and find what members are in attendance knocking at the door, and arresting them and bring them in, it will perhaps be correct; but to open the doors to Mr. Cochran will be to allow everybody else to come in.

Mr. KETCHAM—I desire to renew the motion of the gentleman from Saratoga, to purge all members now absent or by implication declared in contempt by the action of the Convention. I believe it was stated when the resolution was adopted providing for an adjournment at one o'clock P. M. on Saturday, instead of two o'clock, that it would enable many members to go home, and in pursuance of this apparent invitation of the Convention, members have gone home and have not yet had the opportunity to return, except by traveling on the Sabbath, so that by the course we are pursuing we insist upon a breach of the Sabbath, which I do insist is improper. I therefore renew the motion of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond], and hope that a vote will be taken on it, and that it be by ayes and noes. I do not like the Convention to appear to be requiring members to violate the laws of God and the State by traveling on Sunday.

Mr. BELL—I understand that by a recent order of the Convention, which was adopted after thorough discussion, we decided to commence our daily sessions at ten o'clock A. M., and at two o'clock P. M. take a recess to half-past seven o'clock P. M. This was to be the standing rule on this subject, except as to Fridays and Saturdays. The rule regulating our sittings on those days is that on each alternate Saturday we are to adjourn at one o'clock P. M. to ten o'clock A. M. on the next Monday, and on each alternate Friday we are to adjourn to half-past seven o'clock P. M. on the succeeding Monday.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I trust the motion of the

The question was then put on excusing Mr. T. W. DWIGHT from voting, and it was declared lost.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I am compelled to vote "no."

Mr. HALE's name was called.

Mr. HALE—I ask to be excused from voting. My reasons are these: I do not think it is due to myself, or to other members of this Convention, to be obliged to vote on a question of this importance, when we have been favored with one speech, and one speech only, in favor of the matter, and there has been no opportunity for any one to speak against; in other words, when the previous question has been ordered upon a question involving the liberty of members of this Convention, without any opportunity for debate, except by the gentleman who advocates it.

The question was then put on excusing Mr. HALE from voting, and it was declared lost.

Mr. HALE—I vote "no."

Mr. PROSSER's name was called.

Mr. PROSSER—I ask to be excused from voting. I am in favor of one part of this proposition and am opposed to the other. I am willing that the resolution declaring members of the Convention who are absent without leave in contempt shall pass, but not the portion which authorizes the arrest.

The question was put on excusing Mr. PROSSER from voting, and it was declared lost.

Mr. PROSSER—I vote "no."

Mr. SEYMOUR's name was called.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I ask to be excused from voting. My reasons are these: while I believe it is in the power of this body to issue the process indicated, I do not feel as a man of honor that I have a right to vote for it until I have had an opportunity to present an excuse for a member of this Convention, who requested that I should present such an excuse for him when he left, and which excuse I deem to be good and valid, and which I have tried for a long while to present.

The question was put on excusing Mr. SEYMOUR from voting, and it was declared lost.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I vote "no."

Mr. SILVESTER's name was called.

Mr. SILVESTER—I ask to be excused from voting. Without stating what my opinion was with respect to the main question, before it had been put, I desired to present excuses for two members, and I had no opportunity to do so.

The question was put on excusing Mr. SILVESTER from voting, and it was declared lost.

Mr. SILVESTER—I vote "no."

The SECRETARY completed the call of the roll, and the motion of Mr. Alvord was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Barker, Bell, Bickford, Case, Clinton, Cooke, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, Ely, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Hitchcock, Kinney, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Opdyke, Rathbun, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Smith, Spencer, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wales—42.

Noes—Messrs. Baker, Ballard, Bowen, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Champlain, Chesebro, Clark, Conger, Corning, Daly, T. W. Dwight, Hale, Harris, Ketcham, Krum, Mattice, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Pond, Prosser, Schell, Schumaker, Seymour, Silvester, Strong, Tappan, S. Townsend, Wakeman—29.

Mr. CONGER—I move a reconsideration of the vote which has just been taken, and when the reconsideration is ordered, as I think it will be unquestionably by the Convention, I shall move for a division of the question.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order. In moving for a reconsideration, the gentleman must not discuss it, but it must lie over under the rule.

Mr. CONGER—I moved a reconsideration as a privilege of this House. I now move it over again as a question of privilege of this Convention.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order that that is not a question of privilege.

Mr. CONGER—It is a question of the privilege of the Convention; I ask it as a question of the privilege of this Convention under the law which constitutes this body, and which expressly forbids any such action as that which has been claimed by the majority. The law expressly forbids it, and it is a question of the privilege of the Convention, if I know what such a question is.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It is in the power of the house, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CONGER—In the law organizing this body the law says:

"The Convention shall have the power to punish as a contempt, and by imprisonment—

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] will continue to state his point of order, the Chair does not quite understand the point as yet.

Mr. CONGER—That law says "the Convention shall have the power to punish, as a contempt and by imprisonment or otherwise, a breach of its privileges, or of the privileges of its members; but such power shall not be exercised, except against persons guilty of one or more of the following offenses:

1. The offense of arresting a member or officer of the Convention, in violation of his privilege from arrest, as hereinbefore declared.
2. That of disorderly conduct in the immediate view and presence of the Convention, and directly tending to interrupt its proceedings.
3. That of publishing any false and malicious report of the proceedings of the Convention, or of the conduct of a member in his delegated capacity.
4. That of refusing to attend or be examined as a witness, either before the Convention or a committee, or before any person authorized by the Convention or by a committee, to take testimony in the proceedings of the Convention.
5. That of giving or offering a bribe to a member, or attempting by menace, or any other corrupt means or device, directly or indirectly, to control or influence a member in giving his vote, or to prevent him from giving the same.

Mr. BARKER—Will you read the next sentence?

Mr. CONGER—Certainly:

The question was then put upon ordering the previous question, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 35 to 23.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the question to be on the motion of Mr. Alvord that all absentees not excused are in contempt, and that the President shall issue his order for their arrest.

Mr. CHESEBRO — On that I ask the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. COOKE — I would like to inquire whether this motion will subject every person to punishment who has not been specifically excused here to-day, although he may have had leave of absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that all who have leave of absence are not in contempt.

Mr. COOKE — It seems to me from the form of the gentleman's motion it would exclude all who have not been specifically excused.

Mr. SEYMOUR — I would ask the Chair if the motion was not that the order be confined to the city of Albany?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — I believe it was.

Mr. ALVORD — What I said was, that for the present the sergeant-at-arms be instructed not to go without the limits of the city of Albany.

Mr. SEYMOUR — I would inquire whether the desire is that the warrant be issued for all that are absent?

Mr. ALVORD — Certainly.

Mr. SEYMOUR — I hope the motion will not be carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair understands it in this way, that all members of the Convention not present, and not excused either by leave of absence or by formal excuse here to-day, be declared in contempt, and that the President issue his orders to the sergeant-at-arms for their arrest, and that the sergeant-at-arms be directed not to execute that order except in the vicinity of the capital.

The SECRETARY commenced to call the roll.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND — I would ask whether the motion is divisible?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that it is.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND — Then I ask it be divided.

Mr. ALVORD — I rise to a point of order that the roll has commenced to be called, and it is too late to ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. TAPPEN — I would ask whether it is in order to lay this motion on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion it is not, the roll having been commenced to be called.

Mr. BALLARD — I wish to ask whether the President deems it a legal right existing in this body to arrest absent members for contempt and hold them as prisoners?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The point of order does not rise at this time. It is not the province of the Chair to instruct the Convention, and gentlemen will vote according to their own legal knowledge in that respect. The President will have to decide that when he comes to issue the warrant, at least in some respects.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND — I would suggest to the Chair and the Convention, when about to take so important a step, whether it would be proper to reduce the resolution to precise language in writing?

Mr. ALVORD — I call the gentleman to order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The gentleman is not in order. The Secretary will proceed with the calling of the roll.

The name of Mr. Ballard was called.

Mr. BALLARD — I ask to be excused from voting, and my reason is that I do not believe that this body —

Mr. ALVORD — I rise to a point of order, that from the very terms in which the gentleman began his excuse it is no excuse.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman has a right to state his excuse in his own manner.

Mr. BALLARD — My excuse was, I have legal doubts in my own mind, as to the right of this body to arrest absent members, and hold them as prisoners.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Ballard from voting, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BALLARD — I vote "no."

Mr. COCHRAN — I am in doubt as to my right to vote upon this question, having been in contempt some moments, and I ask, therefore, to be excused.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman has no right to vote, not yet being purged of his contempt, being in contempt for being absent on the call of the roll.

Mr. BAKER — Is it in order to move that the gentleman be excused as a privileged question?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — Not at present, when the call of the roll is proceeding.

Mr. PARKER — I wish to ask the President if he is not in error in saying that the gentleman is in contempt?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that it is not necessary for a formal vote to declare him in contempt. The mere absence at the call of the roll when a call of the Convention has been ordered places him in contempt.

Mr. A. J. PARKER — Therefore I do not see the use of this resolution that we are voting upon, the first part of it.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT's name was called.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT — I ask to be excused, and wish to give my reasons. I find, sir, there is no case on record in this country where any Convention has ever exercised the power of sending for its absent members, and Mr. Jameson, in his work on the subject of Constitutional Conventions, states very distinctly that the Convention has no such power. If we proceed without authority on this subject, every lawyer knows we are liable personally to an action for false imprisonment. It is, therefore, my desire to have a committee raised to examine into this question before we vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The gentleman is transcending, somewhat, the limits of giving an excuse.

Mr. CONGER — I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and that that motion lie on the table.

The CHAIR — That cannot lie on the table for the same reason that it is an appeal which must be decided.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Conger, and it was declared lost.

Mr. OPDYKE — I move that Mr. Cochran be now brought to the bar of the Convention and be permitted to state his excuse.

Mr. BAKER — As an amendment I propose the following resolution which will embrace all the members who are present :

Resolved, That the Clerk proceed without delay and complete the call of the Convention, that all the members absent without leave be and are hereby declared in contempt; that the sergeant-at-arms open the doors of this Convention and admit all members in the city awaiting to be admitted herein, when each of such absent members may present his excuse at the bar of this Convention which shall immediately act upon such excuse.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — If it is moved for a suspension of the call, it is in order.

Mr. BAKER — I understand it is confirmatory of, and modifies the motion of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], and is in part a suspension.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Convention has just directed that the absent members be placed in contempt, placed in arrest and the warrant be issued to that effect, and that must be reconsidered before this motion is in order.

Mr. POND — Is it in order to move a suspension of the call now?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion it is.

Mr. POND — I make that motion then. I think this order of business has now proceeded so far as to convince those who originally voted against it that they were right originally and I hope they will come around now and vote to suspend the further call of this Convention.

Mr. HITCHCOCK — Is not the pending question on a motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Opdyke]?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The question was upon the motion of the gentleman from Montgomery [Mr. Baker] who offered his resolution as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Opdyke], as a part of the call; and the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] moved to suspend the call, and that motion is in order.

Mr. BICKFORD — I would inquire whether if the motion of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] prevails it will supersede the order just made by the Convention, that the President issue his warrant for the arrest of the absent members?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that it will.

Mr. SEYMOUR — I hope the motion of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] will prevail. I am as anxious as any member of this Convention to sustain its dignity and proceed with its business, but I do protest against our proceeding and shutting out from the consideration of the Convention the cases of those gentlemen who have good and valid excuses. When gentlemen have left the city under circumstances which we know will be justified by the majority of this Convention, unless their excuses be stated, I deem it to be unjust that we should proceed against them in this summary way. I can conceive of no reason why we should. I do not think we shall gain anything to the business of the Convention in the future, if we proceed thus without hearing the excuses which we have commenced to hear. We should not, after hearing a number of excuses from gentlemen that satisfy this Convention, take this step and exclude others who have good excuses to be presented by their friends who are here, and who are notified of it. I will go as far as any gentleman here in the right and proper path to maintain the dignity of this Convention, to insure the attendance of the members, and to dispatch the business of the Convention. I regret as deeply as any member here that we have been left without a quorum this morning, but I do protest against this proceeding that shall shut out the justice of the claims of our peers here upon this floor to be excused, and that they, whether they are rightfully or wrongfully absent, shall be declared by us who happen to be here this morning, to be in contempt, while they may have good excuses which we ought to accept. I know it is not the intention of this Convention to declare any honorable member of this Convention in contempt who has a good excuse for being absent. If so, I ask why do we do it by proceeding in this call, and issuing the process for arresting men who have had no opportunity through their friends, or by themselves in person, to present their excuses. I shall vote for the motion of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond], and hope we shall stop these proceedings at least until members who are charged with the duties of giving excuses for other members who are necessarily absent shall have the privilege of presenting these excuses to the consideration for the Convention. I think we owe it to ourselves to do so.

Mr. MERRITT — I rise to a point of order. The point of order is that the Chair has no right to entertain a motion which is equivalent to a question which has been decided to be not in order, and from the fact that the motion to reconsider has been decided not in order, therefore no motion can be entertained which is equivalent to that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair does not understand the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. MERRITT — A certain proposition was adopted by this Convention and there was a motion to reconsider that proposition, and it was decided to go over under the rule. The proposition now submitted is admitted to be equivalent to a motion for a reconsideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is not of the opinion that it is an equivalent motion.

Mr. MERRITT — With that decision of the Chair I do not concur. A motion to reconsider pertains to the business of the day, and, therefore, it is one which is proper to be entertained and decided here, and does not go over under the rule as all motions to reconsider.

"In all cases in which the Convention shall punish any of its members or officers, or any other person, by imprisonment, such imprisonment shall not extend beyond the session of the Convention."

Very good. What does that amount to? That proves nothing.

Mr. ALVORD—Without desiring to be officious, I rise again to state my point of order. It seems to me the gentleman has exhausted his question of privilege—

Mr. CONGER—It is not a question of personal privilege; it is a question of the privilege and power of this Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. CONGER—I do not ask it as a question of personal privilege, but as a question of the privilege of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the motion to reconsider must lie on the table.

Mr. CONGER—Is that the absolute decision of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It is.

Mr. CONGER—Then I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and ask that the appeal lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It will lie on the table, there being no objection.

Mr. BAKER—I have drawn a resolution that may possibly get us out of the difficulty.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order. The Chair has just directed the motion of the gentleman from Rockland to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair stated there being no objection, it would be laid on the table.

Mr. ALVORD—I understood it might lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair understood it so if there was no objection.

Mr. ALVORD—There was an objection, certainly.

Mr. CONGER—The objection was not taken in time.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The objection was taken in time, as it was taken before the announcement, though unheard by the Chair.

Mr. CONGER—The objection was taken after the absolute decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The objection was taken on the supposition that the Chair decided positively. The Chair holds the objection was taken in time, and the appeal from the decision of the Chair must now be decided.

Mr. MERRITT—I am very sorry this question has arisen.

Mr. BAKER—I wish to inquire whether I have not the floor? I arose, was recognized by the Chair, and began to read a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] has the floor.

Mr. MERRITT—I am very sorry the step has been taken, and I do believe in adhering—

Mr. ALVORD—I am under the necessity of rising to a point of order.

Mr. MERRITT—I am discussing the appeal.

Mr. ALVORD—I understand it, sir, but an appeal taken on a non-debatable question is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of that opinion.

Mr. MERRITT—I rise to a point of order—that the question of reconsideration is debatable, and the appeal is therefore debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion for a reconsideration lies, by the rule, on the table immediately upon its being made, therefore it is not debatable. The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] made a motion to reconsider, and the Chair decided it must be laid on the table. He then rose and claimed, as he undoubtedly candidly thought, that it was a privileged question, and therefore could be entertained. The Chair decided against him, that it must lie on the table. He appealed from that decision, therefore the appeal is not debatable—otherwise, the whole object of the rule, that the motion to reconsider must lay on the table, would be avoided, and the Convention would be swept off into a vortex of debate upon questions aside from the main issue. The Chair is of the opinion that the question must be put on the appeal immediately.

Mr. MERRITT—May I ask a question? If when that motion to reconsider was properly before the Convention it was debatable, the question of reconsideration and an appeal from it is properly before this Convention.

Mr. ALVORD—It seems to me the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] does not understand the appeal. It is from the decision of the Chair that the motion to reconsider must lie on the table.

Mr. MERRITT—That is the point I wish to argue.

Mr. TAPPEN—I desire to raise a point of order, that no debate is now in order on this subject, because the Chair directed a vote to be taken on the appeal, and a portion of the vote has been taken.

Mr. MERRITT—I rise to a point of order—that the Chair has no right to take the vote without discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the question on the appeal must be at once taken.

Mr. MERRITT—Without discussion?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Yes, sir.

Mr. MERRITT—On that I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to another point of order, that appeal cannot be filed on appeal.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that one appeal must be decided at a time.

Mr. POND—Is it in order to move to lay this business on the table?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That is the very question, whether it shall lie on the table.

Mr. POND—I wish to move to lay the whole order of business on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It is not in order at present. The question is on an appeal taken by the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], from the decision of the Chair.

The question was put on sustaining the decision of the Chair, and it was declared carried.

A sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. ALVORD—I would ask the Chair if taking a recess until half-past seven o'clock does not do away with proceedings under the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the breaking off of the proceedings in the Convention now, suspends proceedings under the call.

Mr. SILVESTER—That is one of the objects I had in moving an adjournment, because when we met again, we would then be in a condition by reason of the presence of a quorum, to resume the business of the Convention without discussing this business of the excuses of members.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the roll on the motion of Mr. Silvester, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Baker, Ballard, Bowen, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Champlain, Chesebro, Clark, Conger, Corning, T. W. Dwight, Hale, Harris, Ketcham, Krum, Mattice, Merwin, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Pond, Potter, Schell, Schumaker, Seymour, Silvester, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend, Wakeman—29.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Barker, Bell, Bickford, Clinton, Cooke, DuZanne, C. C. Dwight, Ely, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Hitchcock, Kinney, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, Merrill, Merritt, Opdyke, Prosser, Rathbun, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Smith, Spencer, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wales—41.

Mr. CONGER—I move to commit the resolution that has been passed, by which the Convention orders the sergeant-at-arms to proceed to the arrest of members outside of the bar of the Convention, to a select committee of three, to consist of the gentleman from Oneida, Mr. T. W. Dwight, the gentleman from Cortland, Mr. Ballard, and the gentleman from Essex, Mr. Hale, for them to require and report as to the power of this Convention to proceed any further in an attempt to arrest any of its members on the ground of contempt for non-attendance.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that the motion is not in order, there being no quorum present.

Mr. POND—I would inquire whether rule 34 does not authorize that? It provides that the Convention may take such measures as they may deem necessary to procure the attendance of a quorum of members, and the proposition of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] is to inquire as to the proper mode.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that it does not authorize the appointment of a committee as proposed.

Mr. CONGER—I will modify my resolution, to come within that provision, and require the committee to instruct the Convention as to the measures that they may deem necessary to secure the presence of a quorum, and also to report whether the measure just adopted instructing the sergeant-at arms to arrest members, is not beyond the power of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the gentleman [Mr. Conger] is not in order.

Mr. CONGER—I do not desire to propose any course of action which will not tend to relieve this body from the very disastrous effects of the resolution which has been passed; and, if I understand the law—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Secretary requests that for the convenience of making up the Journal, that the gentleman will reduce his motion to writing.

Mr. CONGER—I will.

Mr. ALVORD—I observe that two gentlemen who were absent and who were declared to be in contempt by action of the Convention are now on the floor. I move that they be requested to state if they have any excuses to offer by which they can be purged of their contempt.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Will the gentleman designate?

Mr. ALVORD—Mr. M. I. Townsend and Mr. Cochran.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] was excused from contempt by a vote of the Convention, and Mr. Cochran was admitted by a vote of the Convention to state the reasons for his absence.

Mr. ALVORD—I must challenge the Journal of the Secretary if it so states. I desire to state, what every member of the Convention knows to be the fact, that a motion was made by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] to excuse Mr. M. I. Townsend, a separate and distinct motion—and that motion was lost, and the Convention never recurred again to the original proposition.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I call the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] to order.

Mr. ALVORD—I desire to have order.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I would ask the Secretary to refer to the Journal.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read from the Journal, as follows:

"Mr. SEYMOUR moved that Mr. M. I. Townsend be excused.

"Mr. C. C. DWIGHT moved, as a substitute for such motion, that all members absent without leave be excused. After debate the motion was withdrawn."

The PRESIDENT then put the question on excusing Mr. M. I. Townsend, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. COCHRAN—Mr. President, I am very glad to have an opportunity to purge myself of the alleged contempt of the Convention. I regret very much that my absence, temporary though it was, should have contributed in part to delay the proceedings of this body. I have been careful to avoid any complicity in that misfortune, and have, therefore, refrained from returning to my home on Saturday nights, as was the habit of many, fearing that I might not be able to reach here in time to participate in the deliberations of the body on the following Monday morning. On last Saturday I did not return to my home, but I did venture to make a visit to one of the neighboring rural districts. The train on which I was returning this morning was

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. RATHBUN—I have taken very little interest in the proceedings so far, in reference to the matter now pending; and I feel very little interest in the present condition of things, any further than that the Convention should maintain its consistency in the future action which is to be had upon this question. We have, as I understand it, declared that certain members of the Convention, who are absent, are in contempt. I object, therefore, to any excuse in behalf of those gentlemen except from themselves. We have gone one step too far to allow any one to give excuses for members except the members themselves, who are declared to be in contempt. Now, whether the action of the Convention is to proceed further than to bring enough of the absent members in to make up a quorum, depends upon the feeling of the Convention. I desire, and I believe no member of the Convention present desires to go any further in this matter than I, to obtain a quorum of members so as to be able to do business. The order which has been made will necessarily bring to us, within the course of half an hour, and I presume if the doors were now open there would come in, a requisite number. But inasmuch as the order has been made by the Convention that the sergeant-at-arms proceed to arrest and bring in these members, I hope that the Convention will adhere to that, because I apprehend the gentlemen absent will not feel they are very much injured providing they have excuses. I have no doubt that most of them have excuses which will be satisfactory to the Convention. The matter of arrest, we all understand very well, is not a very serious thing. I believe the sergeant-at-arms hardly ever takes a member by the shoulder, or says anything to him more than that he is wanted inside of the chamber. I doubt very much whether any of the members of this Convention, if arrested, will bring an action for false imprisonment for being invited in, through the sergeant-at-arms. Now, although it is not a very serious matter, or injurious to the reputation or person of a member, yet I do insist that this Convention either has, or has not, the power to control a majority of its members so as to be able to do the business for which we are sent here. I do insist that, inasmuch as we have gone so far in the direction of the exercise of power which I have no doubt is possessed by the Convention, we shall go one step further, and that the members of the Convention who are to be found in the city, will be brought in here, and that we make up from them a number sufficient, so that the Convention will be organized and be competent to do business, and that we hear excuses from them and not from anybody else. I hope, therefore, that the motion upon this subject will not prevail.

Mr. SILVESTER—I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] will prevail. It seems to me that during the whole of this morning we might have been much more profitably occupied in discussing the main business of the Convention than we have been. I do not know how the question was raised, but certainly the business might have proceeded without a quorum as we have done before. It seems to me we should now, be better occupied in discussing the main subject before us, and that even having proceeded as far as we have in this matter it would be much more profitable to dispense with any further proceeding under the call than to attempt to get members here to hear their excuses: for when they come in and a quorum is present, we shall have proceeded, during their absence, with the main business of the Convention. I move the previous question.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Silvester, and it was declared carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the question to be on the motion of Mr. Pond.

Mr. ALVORD—On that I call the ayes and noes. A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the roll on the motion of Mr. Pond, and it was declared lost, by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Baker, Ballard, Bowen, E. A. Brown, Champlain, Chesbro, Clark, Conger, Corning, T. W. Dwight, Hale, Harris, Ketcham, Krum, Mattie, Merwin, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Pond, Schell, Schumaker, Seymour, Silvester, Strong, Tappen, S. Townsend—26.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Barker, Bell, Bickford, W. C. Brown, Case, Clinton, Cooke, Daly, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, Ely, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Hitchcock, Kinney, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, Merrill, Merritt, Opdyke, Prosser, Rathbun, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Smith, Spencer, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales—45.

Mr. LAPHAM—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. BARKER—I desire to inquire if the Chair what effect the motion of the gentleman [Mr. Lapham] will have, if it is carried, upon the pending business—whether it suspends the call?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that it will terminate the proceedings under the call.

Mr. LAPHAM—Do we not resume it on the coming together of the Convention?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the subject of the call cannot then be resumed.

Mr. LAPHAM—Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SILVESTER—I move that all proceedings be suspended under the call until half-past seven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Convention has just taken action upon that motion.

Mr. SILVESTER—I move then that we now adjourn.

Mr. ALVORD—Upon that I call the ayes and noes.

Mr. HALE—I would inquire whether the motion to adjourn would be equivalent to a recess until half-past seven o'clock or until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—In the opinion of the Chair it would be equivalent to taking a recess until half-past seven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I would like to inquire what process is going on at this moment to insure a quorum?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The sergeant-at-arms is in pursuit of absentees at this time—so the Chair is informed.

Mr. SILVESTER—I would like to ask a leave of absence until half-past seven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—In the opinion of the Chair it is not in order to grant a leave of absence as requested.

Mr. CONGER—In obedience to the direction of the Chair I have reduced the resolution I proposed to writing. I would say in reference to the names that I have inserted as members of the committee, that I have retained them in accordance with the resolution as I announced it orally, but that I will request the Clerk for the present to omit the reading of the names (Messrs. Dwight, Ballard, and Hale), as I do not wish to seem to interfere with the ordinary rule by which the President appoints members of the committee.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Convention just passed, authorizing, among other things, the sergeant-at-arms to arrest certain members of the Convention for contempt because of non-attendance at this morning's session, be referred to a select committee of three, to report to the Convention, whether this Convention has the power under the law constituting it, so to order the sergeant-at-arms to make arrest of any members for non-attendance; and that the said committee have power to report to the Convention what measures they may, under the law, recommend as necessary to secure the presence of a quorum at this time, or any future occasion, and what censure may be lawfully inflicted on those now absent or who may hereafter absent themselves from the sessions of this body.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order. There being no quorum present, the resolution cannot be entertained.

Mr. CONGER—I beg pardon of the gentleman [Mr. Alvord]. I refer the Chair to rule 34, and I will say to the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] that if the whole is not admissible I am willing to divide the question.

Mr. ALVORD—I insist upon the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The point of order is well taken. The Chair has already taken the position that rule 34 confines action to members who are present, and does not authorize them to refer anything outside of this Convention to a committee on which to report to the Convention, and more especially as this comes in conflict with the action they have already taken, which cannot be disposed of except by a reconsideration.

Mr. CONGER—I hope that the Chair has not decided that point of order yet without a hearing.

Mr. ALVORD—I must insist upon the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair having said it had decided it, it must be understood that it has decided it.

Mr. CONGER—I regret the Chair has so decided the question, for it forces upon me the necessity, for the first time in this Convention, of taking an appeal from the decision of the Chair, in order to plainly state the point I wished to maintain, before I took my seat when the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] arose. I wish to state the grounds upon which I think the latter part of the proposition must commend itself to every gentleman present.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Does the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. CONGER—I do, if the decision is stated in advance.

The PRESIDENT then announced the question to be on sustaining the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CONGER—Under rule 34 this Convention has, in the absence of a quorum, the power to take such measures as they may deem necessary to secure the presence of a quorum, and may inflict such censure as they may deem just. If they have the power to do that in the absence of a quorum they have unquestionably the power, by the axiom that the whole always contains a part, to refer that question to a committee; and the latter part of my proposition is simply to have this question so referred in order to advise this Convention, before it takes any such action as proposed. I, and many gentlemen about this circle learned in the law, firmly believe the action proposed, to be entirely in violation of the privileges of every member of this body, and would be so gross an attempt at a violation of personal liberty as to make the officer of this House responsible at common law for breach of the law in the arrest of any member. If the law gave us any inkling even of power to arrest, if it put us in the same condition in which a legislative body is placed, I would not pretend to raise the question, but would admit that it was clear that the Convention had power. But we see that the Convention has no power except what the law has given it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is decided in its opinion. The gentleman will confine himself to the discussion of the appeal.

Mr. CONGER—I will then state the point in question in such a way, and without argument, that there may be clearly seen by the Convention the ground upon which I take the appeal. I hope it will not be supposed that I am taking a factious appeal or an appeal to gain time. I take it simply because I regard it as an important question, and I desire to get it before this body in such a shape that it may act advisedly upon it. If the law gave this Convention the general power to arrest its members, I could not pretend to raise the question of order or the question of appeal. But the law definitely states five certain cases under which the Convention may order the arrest of any of its members or of other persons; and the question of non-attendance is not included in any of the five cases, so that the attempt on the part of the Convention to assume legislative functions in the arrest of its members for non-attendance is a violation of the peace and order of society and of the fundamental law of the State.

Mr. HALE—I would ask the gentleman from somewhat delayed, and having my children with me, I was compelled to take them with me to the house which is my temporary home, and which is not within the city limits, but is some distance beyond; and as soon as I had taken them home, I returned as quickly as I could with proper respect to the Convention, and found the doors locked; that a call of the house had been ordered, though it was not yet completed. I have no other excuse to offer. I say again that I regret to have contributed to the inconvenience of the Convention, and submit myself wholly to whatever disposition they may make.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — I move that the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Cochran] be purged of contempt.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Van Campen, and it was declared carried.

Mr. HALE — I move that this Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — On that I call the ayes and noes.

Mr. DICKFORD — I rise to a question of order. There is a permanent order in this Convention that the Convention will take a recess each day at two o'clock until half-past seven, and therefore a motion to adjourn now is inconsistent with that order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken. The prior order of the Convention only fixes the limit beyond which the morning session shall not continue. An adjournment before that time arrives can be had if the Convention sees fit.

Mr. E. A. BROWN — Is it in order to move to take a recess until half-past seven o'clock?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that it is.

Mr. E. A. BROWN — Then I make that motion.

Mr. ALVORD — I rise to a point of order. A motion to adjourn takes precedence over a motion for a recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of opinion that the motion to adjourn takes precedence.

Mr. HALE — I will withdraw my motion to adjourn.

Mr. E. A. BROWN — I move then that the Convention take a recess until half-past seven.

Mr. ALVORD — I would inquire of the Chair whether, if that motion is carried, it will not do away with all proceedings under the call?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair has already stated that it will.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. E. A. Brown, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BICKFORD — I would make an inquiry whether, with an order existing that a recess is to be taken each day at two o'clock until half-past seven, that order can be executed on this occasion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The opinion of the Chair is, that to take it would result in a suspension of the proceedings under the call.

Mr. DALY — I rise for the purpose of making a suggestion and asking, if we adjourn at the regular hour of two o'clock, it will have the effect of dissolving proceedings under the call? In my own judgment it will. But I make this suggestion that we can meet again at such hour as we have agreed upon, and renew the call of the Convention, and the practical result we desire would be realized in that way. I will add, in addition, that the most effectual and successful mode of securing the attendance of members is to be found in the practice of the House of Representatives and Senate, and that is to call the roll every morning, and note the absentees, and have them published from day to day. It is a far more practical and effectual mode than that of securing the attendance of members through the instrumentality of a call of the Convention. I beg leave to take the judgment of the Chair whether, if we adjourn at the regular hour under the rule, it will dissolve the call of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that it does, because the doors must be opened and remain open, and the chamber will be accessible to absentees as well as other members.

Mr. WAKEMAN — I would inquire whether it is in order to move to suspend the call of the Convention until half-past seven?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — That would be tantamount to a suspension of the call entirely, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN — I desire to ask if the sergeant-at-arms has gone in pursuit of absent members?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is informed that the sergeant-at-arms is absent from the chamber in pursuit of absentees.

Mr. HALE — If in order, I wish to ask leave of the Convention to be excused for the period of half an hour. My reason is this: a relative of mine is about to leave town soon after two o'clock, and whom it is important I should see before he leaves.

The question was put on the motion to grant a leave of absence to Mr. Hale for a half hour, and it was declared carried.

Mr. DUGANNE — I would ask if it is in order to move that leave of absence be granted to all members now present until half-past seven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that such a motion would be tantamount to a motion for an adjournment, and would have the same effect.

Mr. SILVESTER — Is it in order for me to ask that Mr. Sheldon be excused from contempt?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. — The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order at present.

Mr. TAPPEN — I would ask leave of absence for myself, for the reason that, in my anxiety to get here this morning, I had no breakfast, and certainly I am entitled to something to eat before the day passes by. It seems to me, it is a question of humanity to grant me leave of absence for twenty minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALVORD — A great many of us had a very poor breakfast in our efforts to get here at nine o'clock, and I must object to granting the request of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Tappen].

Mr. SFAVER — I arise to a point of order, that in the absence of a quorum, the Convention has no power to grant leave of absence.

man [Mr. Conger] did not understand me. I will state the matter as plainly as I can. I deny that the minority have any power to appoint a committee. That is the position and nothing else.

Mr. CONGER—I understand that the gentleman [Mr. Alvord] denies the power, but when he attempts to state his reason for denying the power he fails, because by the rule the minority has jurisdiction of every subject and every circumstance under which I ask that this committee shall be raised, in order to advise the Convention.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I move the previous question.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. E. A. Brown, and it was declared carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the opinion of the Convention?

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I call for the ayes and noes.

Not a sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were not ordered.

Mr. CONGER—Do I understand the Chair to decide that both parts of my proposition are not in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that nothing can be done in the absence of a quorum except in pursuance of power specially conferred, and as the Chair construes rule 34, a minority must remain in session and they themselves act upon any question brought before them. They cannot create a committee to inquire and report at some subsequent time, as must necessarily be the case where a legal question is involved. The minority must remain in session to decide for themselves.

Mr. KETCHAM—I rise to a question of privilege. The dumping of the coal in the street between this building and Congress Hall, makes so much noise that it is impossible for gentlemen to hear the remarks either of members or the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair appreciates the difficulty in reference to dumping the coal and has given directions in regard to it, but it desires to state it has no personal power to remedy it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHUMAKER—I rise to a question of privilege. I have not yet had any breakfast and I desire leave of absence to get breakfast.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair has no power to excuse gentlemen on account of their not having had their breakfasts.

Mr. WAKEMAN—I move the Convention take a recess until half-past seven.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Wakeman, and it was declared lost.

Mr. ALVORD—I understand that the Chair is going to rule that under the order of the Convention, we are in recess at a certain point of time until half-past seven o'clock. I shall request the Chair, if it is proper, that it instruct the officers of the Convention to take charge of the chamber, and permit no one else to come in or go out except those members who have been in attendance this morning at the hour of the recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair has not so announced its decision. It is in doubt upon that question.

Mr. ALVORD—Do I understand the Chair as deciding that we have no power to take a recess?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair has not decided that point. It has not arisen.

Mr. ALVORD—I understood that the Chair had decided that point, and that was my reason for making the suggestion.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—Is it not a settled rule that the Convention must take a recess at two o'clock until half-past seven o'clock? Can that be interfered with by the action of the minority?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That is the resolution on the Journal.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—It seems to me that that must govern us—that we must take a recess from two o'clock until half-past seven.

Mr. LAPHAM—I would submit to the Chair this consideration: The members of the Convention now present take no order whatever. We simply obey an order of the Convention adopted prior to to-day, which is that at two o'clock a recess should be taken until half-past seven. That does not, in my view, suspend this call at all. It leaves the call in full force. We are simply obeying a mandate of this Convention which is obligatory on us, although we are a minority. We do not adjourn; we do not take any action which suspends the call; we simply obey an order which has been announced previous to this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will state that the hour at which, by a previous resolution of the Convention, a recess was to be declared until half-past seven has arrived. The Convention may do as it pleases.

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to inquire whether the order of the President to keep the doors closed will remain in force until after the recess?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair supposes the order is in force. Gentlemen will decide for themselves if it will allow members to depart and return at half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. ALVORD—Do I understand the Chair as declaring the Convention in recess?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will not so declare. If gentlemen separate, the question will come up again on the incoming of the Convention.

EVENING SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at half-past seven, the President pro tem., Mr. FOLGER, in the chair.

Mr. ALVORD—Mr. President, I understand that there are a number of gentlemen, delegates to the Convention present, who are in charge of the sergeant-at-arms. In order to receive their excuses for their absence I move that they be brought before the bar of the Convention.

Mr. SILVESTER—I would like to inquire of the President whether the recess from two o'clock to half-past seven did not dissolve the call?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is not aware of any recess so far as the Journal of the Convention discloses.

Mr. SILVESTER—I think we all feel very sensibly that we have had a recess.

Rockland [Mr. Conger], if he has considered this provision of the law: "And such Convention may adopt such rules and regulations for its own government as the majority of its members may determine." Under that provision of the law, the Convention have adopted rule 34, which makes legal the very course which we have adopted.

Mr. CONGER—I hardly think it will be necessary to present or argue that question on this appeal, because, if the law, in the first instance, has clearly stated the causes for which the Convention might order an arrest of members, and has expressly declared that it shall not order the arrest of members except for those reasons, and as I read the law, it has so done, then clearly it cannot pass any rule for the regulation of proceedings, or the government, or of its order, that it would be in derogation of the mandate of law that it should not so arrest. I hope that the gentleman will look at this question, because, if the opinion expressed by my friend on my right should be adopted on mature consideration as the judgment of this Convention, it would put the Convention into the anomalous position of ordering members to be arrested by the sergeant-at-arms in absolute violation of the enabling act by which this body is convened.

Mr. ALVORD—I desire, although, of course, like all others who talk upon subjects of this kind, I would like to enlarge somewhat, to confine myself directly to the question at issue, and have nothing whatever to do with extraneous matters which the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], under the pretext of an appeal, undertakes to bring into discussion. Rule 34 provides this:

"In case of the absence of a quorum at any session of the Convention, the members present may take such measures as they may deem necessary to secure the presence of a quorum, and may inflict such censure as they may deem just on those who, on being called on for that purpose, shall render no sufficient excuse for their absence."

Now, sir, that is delegating the power of the Convention to a minority of the Convention.

Mr. CONGER—If the gentleman [Mr. Alvord], will allow me to state, I will say that the committee I propose is to be constituted of gentlemen representing the majority and not the minority.

Mr. ALVORD—I think I understand the gentleman [Mr. Conger], distinctly. Now, sir, when the power is delegated to a minority by a rule of the Convention, that minority is confined to these delegated powers; and they cannot go outside of them, not by implication, not even though all the members could swear that according to their information and belief it was the intention of the Convention to give the minority greater powers. They are bound by the exact terms of the rule as it has been laid down by the Convention, and for that reason we have no authority and no power, and cannot by possibility get it by implication or otherwise, for the appointment of a committee.

Mr. CONGER—Will the gentleman [Mr. Alvord], allow me to suggest that I do not propose to delegate the power of this Convention? I merely put the question and ask that a select committee be appointed to report to the Convention on this subject of power.

Mr. ALVORD—I understand the gentleman. The more he speaks about it the muddier he makes it on his own side. The gentleman asks us, a minority of this Convention, who have specific powers beyond which we cannot go, to go outside of the bounds by the appointment of a select committee. We have no authority to authorize a committee of that kind to report to the Convention. We have power delegated by the Convention to the minority, by which we can arrest members who are absent and have left the Convention without a quorum; but when the minority attempts to appoint a committee with authority to report to the Convention we go outside of the power granted to this body, and we cannot by any possibility appoint a committee for that reason. I take it that the presiding officer of this Convention has based his decision upon that ground, and on that ground alone. Leaving out this question, which the gentleman [Mr. Conger] has undertaken to raise by the query of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] and the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], it is simply a question of what power we have got under the rule. I do not know but what I might agree with my friend from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], although I seriously doubt it; for I think I could convince him, upon an argument of the case, that there is an undoubted power on the part of the Convention through the minority, under our rules, to punish these men for contempt, and to arrest them; but that is not the question. It is a question of exercising an original power as a minority, under the rule which has delegated to us certain specific powers, and I say we cannot go beyond them. I think the decision of the presiding officer of this Convention was just and should be sustained by the Convention.

Mr. CONGER—If I understand the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], all that can be made out of his argument is this, that because under rule 34, a minority—

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I rise to a question of order. It is this: that under the question of an appeal it seems to me the discussion has gone as far as it ought to go.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], will confine himself to discussing the question of appeal.

Mr. CONGER—I propose to proceed to reply to the position taken by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], who says that while, under the rule, the minority of the Convention, not being a quorum, has certain powers committed to it, yet they cannot refer the question of that power or the exercise of it to a select committee, simply because it is a minority. It takes possession of the question and the power, because it is a minority, and it has just the same right as the majority has when it has jurisdiction over a question to refer that question to a select committee. If I had asked or wished that the minority here should delegate power, the argument of the gentleman might hold good, but I ask for no such remedy, but only that the question of power and suggestions of what plan the committee should recommend be referred to this committee in order to advise us—

Mr. ALVORD—I apprehend that the gentle-

Mr. ALVORD—The facts are that, although I requested the gentleman [Mr. Corbett] as he has stated, he did not comply with the request, and I had to pay the expressage on the clothes. [Laughter.]

The question was then put on the motion to excuse Mr. Corbett, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BICKFORD—I don't wish to hear any more excuses.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Does the gentleman [Mr. Bickford] make a motion?

Mr. BICKFORD—I do.

SEVERAL DELEGATES—"No; no."

Mr. BICKFORD—Very well—I withdraw it.

Mr. EDDY appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Eddy, you have been absent without leave; what excuse have you to offer?

Mr. EDDY—My excuse is that I was sent for to return home on very important business. I took the first opportunity to return, but did not reach here in time for the morning session. Aside from the engagements that I had to meet, another cause of my absence, and one that was quite as important, was to confer immediately with my constituents in regard to the important matters under consideration in this Convention. And I give it as my opinion, Mr. President, that if more of the members of this Convention would confer immediately with their constituents, it might effect a great saving of time, and many questions and resolutions, etc., that are brought before us would not be introduced. I embraced that opportunity to confer with my constituents, and I came back as soon as I could.

Mr. GRAVES—I move that the gentleman be excused.

Mr. TAPPEN—I would like to know what the gentleman's constituents advised him on this subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDDY—I will state to the gentleman if he wishes to know.

The question was then put on the motion to excuse Mr. Eddy, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SCHELL—I now move that all proceedings under the call be suspended, and on that motion I move the previous question.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Schell, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SHERMAN—I move to reconsider the action of the Convention by which the previous question was ordered. I will state, if the Convention will give me leave, why I do so. I wish to offer an amendment, in case the previous question is not ordered on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Schell], by adding to the motion as follows: "Provided—

Mr. CONGER—I rise to a point of order, that this resolution must lie over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion to reconsider the previous question being as to business before the Convention, it ought not to lie over. [The President pro tem., on subsequently consulting the rule, learned that he was in error.]

Mr. SHERMAN—If there is no objection, then I will propose the amendment, as follows:

"Provided, that members still absent without leave be held in contempt until they shall respectfully render their excuses and submit to the judgment of the Convention."

Unless we adopt some such resolution, those who are still absent escape censure.

The question was put on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered, and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 37 to 33.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The pending question is, shall the main question be now put?

Mr. SHERMAN—I now renew my motion to amend. The amendment is in the possession of the Secretary.

Mr. WEED—I trust the amendment will not prevail. I am opposed to it for this reason. It has been apparent to every gentleman who has been here to-day that this call has entirely interfered with and destroyed the business of the day. Now, if it can have any effect at all upon the members of this Convention it must be a moral effect, for certainly, no gentleman here supposes that a fine or imprisonment will be imposed upon absent members. Its moral effect will be just as great if this call should be suspended now, as it would be if we suspend it under the proposed amendment. There are seventy or eighty members absent in contempt. If you leave these members in contempt, for the next three days, one quarter of the time of this Convention will be taken up with explanations, and the giving of reasons, and the taking of questions upon excusing members who are now in contempt. It seems to me, therefore, looking at it as I do, that the moral effect is the only effect that you have accomplished with all your proceedings to day. It would be more consistent with our duties as members of the Convention to suspend the call entirely upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Schell].

Mr. ALVORD—I beg to differ with the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed]. In the first place his premises are entirely incorrect. A call of the roll was had this morning, and we were found to be without a quorum, so that it was entirely impossible to do any business afterward.

Mr. WEED—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Does he not know in his legislative experience that one-half of the legislation—good legislation too—is done in the absence of a quorum? Except that gentlemen had seen fit to make a call, there was no reason why you could not have gone on to-day with the business.

Mr. ALVORD—I have this answer to make to the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] in that regard. I am aware of the fact that considerable of the routine business in the ordinary legislation of the State is carried on without a quorum; but I have always had serious doubts whether it was not quibbling with the law if not absolutely violating it, and that it was necessary—absolutely necessary—that there should be a quorum of members of the Legislature in attendance upon the transaction of any business that might come before it. I should, for one, have been contented this morning to have remained silent and permitted the business of this Convention to go on without starting the idea of a quorum not being in attendance. But it was suggested and a call of the roll was had; and, while I might

Mr. POND—Has the Chair forgotten that it declared the hour for recess had arrived?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair has not forgotten what it declared.

Mr. COOKE—Are we not guilty of a violation of the rules in not having a recess?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That point is not before the Convention at present.

Mr. POND—Then I make that point.

Mr. WEED appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Weed, you are before the bar of the Convention for a violation of its rules, in being absent without leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. WEED—My excuse, Mr. President, is that I was necessarily South on the Sabbath, in New Jersey, intending to be here this morning. But I found it was impossible to get a train into New York in time, so I took the first train up this morning, arriving here too late to appear before 2 o'clock. That is all the excuse I have.

Mr. HITCHCOCK—I move that the excuse of Mr. Weed be accepted.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hitchcock, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SHERMAN next appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Sherman, you were absent without leave of this Convention. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. SHERMAN—I raise no question of order as to the regularity of these proceedings, although my own opinion is that they are entirely irregular. You ask me, Mr. President, what excuse I have for my absence. I will tell you frankly. I had some business to transact with a bank in Utica this morning which required me to be present during banking hours. Being present there at that time, rendered it impossible for me to return in time for this morning session. I have a large number of other excuses that I could give if necessary, but it seems to me that this ought to be conclusive.

Mr. FLAGLER—I move that the gentleman be excused.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Flagler, and it was declared carried.

Mr. WEED—In coming up to the chamber this evening, I met the gentleman from Wayne [Mr. Archer], who, it seems, was absent this morning. He informed me that he had received a telegram that required him to go north to get a sick daughter, and take her home. He had just returned in the evening train, and was about to go west with his daughter immediately. I therefore move, in pursuance of his request, that he be excused.

Mr. BELL—Allow me to inquire if it will not be time enough to grant the excuse when Mr. Archer returns? Several gentlemen are waiting here to be excused.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Does the gentleman withdraw his request?

Mr. WEED—Yes, if it is thought that it will take less time to withdraw it than to grant it.

Mr. SHELTON next appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Sheldon, you were absent without leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. SHELTON—I had a note due this day at one of the Poughkeepsie banks, and went there to pay it. That is all the excuse I have. I thought I had rather be in contempt here than there. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOWEN—I wish to say one word in relation to Mr. Sheldon. I know he has a daughter who has been sick for some time, and in the early part of the week I heard him ask the gentleman from Oneida to request leave of absence for him. For some reason he did not do so; on account of the sickness of his daughter I feel bound to speak a word in his behalf.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Sheldon, and it was declared carried.

Mr. MORRIS next appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Morris, you have been absent without leave of the Convention. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. MORRIS—Mr. President, in reply to the question I have to say, that I had two or three notes to pay, and had no money to pay them with. I thought it was necessary for me to make arrangements in order to meet my obligations, and thus required my personal attendance, and I am happy to say, I was successful in my efforts. Having accomplished my object I hastened back, and I now present myself at the bar of the Convention.

Mr. CORNING—I move that the gentleman be excused. I know the importance of a man paying his notes. [Laughter.]

The question was put on the motion to excuse Mr. Morris, and it was declared carried.

Mr. CORBETT next appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Corbett, you have been absent without leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. CORBETT—It is well known that the personal appearance of my colleague from Onondaga, [Mr. Alvord] has been severely criticised during the past two or three weeks. On Saturday he requested me to call at his house on Monday morning and bring him some clean clothes. [Laughter.] It is that which detained me.

Mr. ALVORD—I would ask the gentleman whether he called at my house to get the clean clothes?

Mr. CORBETT—Am I obliged to answer that question? [Laughter.]

Mr. POND—I move the gentleman be excused. I think the fine, if any, should be imposed on the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord].

Mr. ALVORD—I would ask the gentleman [Mr. Corbett] to answer categorically, the question I put to him.

SEVERAL DELEGATES—"No; no."

Mr. ALVORD—If he will not answer the question, I will have to explain.

Mr. CHESEBRO—In addition to the fact of Mr. Corbett being excused, I move that the Convention impose upon his colleague [Mr. Alvord] the penalty that he put the clean clothes on. [Laughter.]

Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales—54.

Noes—Messrs. Ballard, Bowen, Carpenter, Champlain, Chesebro, Clark, Cochran, Conger, Corbett, Corning, Daly, Hale, Harris, Ketcham, Krum, Landon, Mattice, Morris, A. J. Parker, Pond, Potter, Schell, Schumaker, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Tappen, Weed—28.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. Schell, as amended on the motion of Mr. Sherman.

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to inquire whether the aggregate vote present would make a quorum?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Secretary informs the Chair that eighty-two gentlemen have answered to their names.

Mr. POND—Is it in order to move to lay the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Schell] on the table?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that it is not.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—Is it in order to ask that the question be divided?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that it is.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I ask that division.

Mr. ALVORD—With due deference to the Chair the question has been made double by the action of the Convention. Therefore, in my opinion, it is not divisible.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is still of the opinion that the gentleman can call for a division of the question.

Mr. SHERMAN—I submit that the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] is right, that the question is not divisible; and I think I can satisfy the President that it is not.

Mr. WEED—I rise to a point of order; the Chair has decided the question to be divisible.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman has the right to appeal.

Mr. SHERMAN—I call the attention of the Chair to rule 34 of this Convention, as follows:

"If any question contain several distinct propositions, it shall be divided by the President, at the request of any member, provided each subdivision if left to itself, shall form a substantive proposition; but the motion to strike out and insert shall be indivisible."

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the last part of the resolution will form a distinct substantive proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN—Suppose the first part is rejected, would the second become a substantive proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It would with a few words added to it.

Mr. SHERMAN—It seems to me it would be a tail without a dog to it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The question seems to be, in the opinion of the Chair, susceptible of division. In the first place, the Convention can vote whether there will be a suspension of the call. In the second place, they can vote, if there is a suspension of the call, what shall be done with the recusants under the call.

Mr. ALVORD—Can I call for the ayes and noes upon the second portion of the proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman can.

Mr. ALVORD—Then I am perfectly willing to have the question divided.

The question was then announced on the first part of the proposition.

Mr. SCHELL—I call for the ayes and noes on that question.

Not a sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were not ordered.

The question was then put on that part of the motion offered by Mr. Schell, and declared carried.

Mr. ALVORD—I call for the ayes and noes on the second proposition.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. WEED—I understand there are members in the hall and the—

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order, that the previous question has been moved upon this, and no other business can intervene.

Mr. WEED—I rise to a point of order, that the call has been suspended by a vote of the Convention. There are gentlemen in the hall who are denied admittance.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is not informed that the call has been suspended by a vote of the Convention.

Mr. WEED—Did not the other vote suspend the call?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The vote was taken only on the first part of the division, and we must proceed to complete the matter in hand.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to call the roll on the part of the second division, being the amendment offered by Mr. Sherman, and it was declared adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Baker, Barker, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Case, Clinton, Cooke, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Field, Flagler, Folger, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Hatch, Hitchcock, Kinney, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Opdyke, O. E. Parker, Prosser, Rathbun, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Sherman, Smith, Spencer, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales—54.

Noes—Messrs. Ballard, Bowen, Carpenter, Champlain, Chesebro, Clark, Cochran, Conger, Corbett, Corning, Daly, Hale, Harris, Ketcham, Krum, Ludington, Mattice, Morris, A. J. Parker, Pond, Potter, Schell, Schumaker, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Strong, Tappen, Weed—29.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I ask the unanimous consent of the Convention to give notice of a motion to correct our rules by which we shall be relieved from ever again being caught in the dilemma in which we were placed this morning. Those of us who had remained here, and desired to carry out the rules of the Convention and proceed with our business, found themselves in this unpleasant dilemma: we were imprisoned, and it was only by brute force that we escaped from confinement here, while it was doubtful whether those outside, who were derelict in their duties would be punished at all. Therefore, if there is no objection, I desire to give a notice.

No objection was made.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I give notice that I will, as soon as practicable, move an amendment to rule 33, by adding at the end thereof the words as follows:

"A recess, while a call of the Convention is pending, will not terminate the proceedings on the call; but no person shall leave, or return to the Convention, pending a call, without a ticket from the President, which he shall exhibit on leaving and deliver to the doorkeeper on returning."

Mr. WEED—I now renew the motion I made with reference to Mr. Archer, of Wayne. I move that Mr. Archer be excused from his contempt for the reason given.

The question was put on the motion to excuse Mr. Archer, and it was declared carried.

Mr. WEED—I move to reconsider the vote taken on the last part of the proposition which was adopted, and which leaves members in contempt.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion will lie over under the rule.

Mr. HAMMOND—I ask the Convention to excuse Mr. Farnham, who was called away Saturday evening by a telegram. He wished me to present his excuse this morning.

The question was put on the motion to excuse Mr. Farnham, and it was declared carried.

Mr. HALE—There are several gentlemen in charge of the sergeant-at-arms, I believe, who wish to render their excuses. I move that we hear their excuses.

Mr. SEYMOUR—Before that is proceeded with I wish to ask an excuse in behalf of Judge Paige, who, when he left last week, requested me to make the request if it should be necessary. Judge Paige complained that he was unwell. I believe it is within the knowledge of many of this Convention that he has been in a very depressed state, owing to a very severe domestic affliction. He wished to go to Clifton Springs for a few days for his health, and I promised to give this excuse to the Convention, which I hope will be sufficient.

Mr. ALVORD—I am opposed to granting excuses to gentlemen, except upon their own request. To do otherwise, does away with the entire force and effect of all we have done. When Judge Paige shall return here in due course of time, his health being restored, he can make his own excuse; and that time will be sufficiently abundant for the purpose. We have done away with or suspended the call, so that these gentlemen who are absent are not now liable to arrest, wherever they may be, by the sergeant-at-arms of the Convention. When they shall come into the body of the Convention, then they can get up and make their own excuses. Otherwise the result will be that parties can go on and make excuses for others, and perhaps the parties could come in and say that there was no such thing. In this connection, I ask the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] when he saw Mr. Archer?

Mr. WEED—I will answer the gentleman with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. HATCH—I do not know what that has to do with the question of excusing Judge Paige?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair thinks the question is not in order, as Mr. Archer has been excused.

Mr. ALVORD—I know, that so far as Mr. Archer is concerned, if he had done as his colleagues did, come from Saratoga last evening, he would have been here this morning, and on his making the request he would have been excused, as a matter of course. He received the telegram, as I understand, in this locality, having just returned from Saratoga.

Mr. BALLARD—Is the gentleman not aware that Mr. Archer did not stop at Saratoga, but went on to Washington county, where he met his wife and daughter?

Mr. WEED—I would like to answer the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] as he asks me the question—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] has the floor. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALVORD—I will not.

Mr. HATCH—I want to know what the question is.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It is on the motion to grant an excuse to Mr. Paige.

Mr. HATCH—What has that to do with Mr. Archer?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] has the floor. The gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch] will please be seated.

Mr. ALVORD—I do not desire to get up any fuss in this Convention. I merely desire to do my duty, and I shall do it without any regard to any efforts on the part of others in attempting to drive me from my position. I say, we have gone to work and declared these gentlemen in contempt, and they are in contempt until they are excused from the contempt or purged from it. They can as well present their excuses themselves, when they come within the body of this Convention, and get up in their places one by one and ask to be excused. If we permit this course now we should have permitted it in the first instance. The mistake was in beginning the wrong direction. There should not have been any excuses until the gentlemen were brought here to be excused in their own proper persons, before the bar of the Convention. I believe what the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] says, in regard to Judge Paige, that he went away in the belief that it was best for him to go to Clifton Springs; and I hope he is there recovering his health. When he comes before us again, with his excuse, of course he will be excused. But I trust we are not to take second hand excuses at this time, in regard to individuals, until we shall finally purge all the members of this Convention who are now absent. The usual and ordinary method of proceeding is to let gentlemen appear in their own behalf, and I trust, therefore, this Convention will not excuse Judge Paige—not because the excuse offered is not upon its face a good one—but, because an excuse should not be stated in that way.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I regret that the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], when he first rose, should have intimated to this Convention, after the declaration made of the language which Judge Paige used to me, that, perhaps, when Judge Paige came himself to give his excuse, he would give a very different one.

Mr. ALVORD—I call the gentleman [Mr. Seymour], to order, I said no such thing.

Mr. SKYMOUR—I am very sure the gentleman did.

Mr. ALVORD—Mr. President—

Mr. SEYMOUR—I don't yield the floor to the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. I was about saying that I was very glad the gentleman before he took his seat, upon second thought, had concluded to avow to this Convention that he believed the excuse I had given for Judge Paige, was the right one. That excuse has been presented to this Convention. Other gentlemen, as well as Judge Paige, have been excused without a word of objection, and I appeal to the Convention not to make a distinction in this case that would seem to cast discredit upon an honorable gentleman who has been with us under circumstances painful to himself, doing his duty.

Mr. KETCHAM—I move the previous question.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Ketcham, and it was declared carried.

The question recurred on the motion to excuse Mr. Paige.

Mr. SEAVER—I rise to a point of order. The Convention has just taken action upon a resolution to suspend further proceedings upon this floor, with the proviso that members in contempt shall remain so until they appear here and purge themselves of that contempt. I hold it to be incompetent for this Convention to proceed any further in regard to excuses until members themselves appear, or until we rescind the resolution which has been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The point of order is well taken.

Mr. POND—It seems to me the resolution just read does not—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Does the gentleman [Mr. Pond] appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. POND—I do, if it is necessary to make the remarks I desire to.

Mr. POND—It seems to me the resolution just read does not require the personal appearance of the absent member at the bar of the Convention. It says that the members absent and in contempt—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Secretary will please read the resolution again.

The SECRETARY read the resolution, as follows:

"Provided, that the members still absent without leave be held in contempt until they shall respectively render their excuses and submit to the judgment of the Convention."

Mr. POND—Is it "respectfully" "or respectfully?"

Mr. SHERMAN—It is "respectively"—that is the way I read it when I introduced it: "Provided, that members still absent without leave be held in contempt until they shall respectively render their excuses and submit to the judgment of the Convention."

Mr. WERD—I rise to a point of order. The resolution as passed by this Convention, and as read by the Secretary when it was passed, and the ayes and noes called upon it, read "respectfully." It was read twice.

Mr. SHERMAN—As I wrote the resolution I intended to write it "respectively," and I supposed it read so.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will be governed by the written language.

Mr. POND—It strikes me as a matter of indifference whether the word "respectively" or the word "respectfully" is used, for the resolution does not call for the personal appearance of a member here; and in regard to Judge Paige it is a peculiarly wrong preceeding. This morning, when the call of the Convention was moved, the previous question was also asked upon it, and at that time, I believe, the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] announced to this Convention that he was requested to make excuses for several gentlemen and he desired to do so now, inasmuch as Judge Paige, when he left, requested an excuse to be made for him. I submit—unless there is some resolution imperatively requiring that Judge Paige shall come here in person to make his excuse—he should not be required to do it. It has been required of no other member. It seems to me, therefore, that the language of this resolution does not show that they shall "respectively" or "respectfully" come here in person to make that excuse; and it is entirely proper and appropriate for Judge Paige to be represented here by the gentlemen of this Convention in the same manner every other gentleman has been represented who has given and been granted his excuse. If he is not excused he remains in contempt every day he is absent. I submit that under the language of this resolution, Judge Paige should be accorded the same privilege that every other gentleman has had, inasmuch as the fact was announced to the Convention this morning that he requested that excuse to be made for him, and by reason of the previous question he was prevented from making it before this order was made. I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I do not wish to be tedious, but simply desire to make a suggestion to the Chair on this question, and it is upon the—

Mr. RATHBUN—I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] has withdrawn his appeal.

Mr. POND—I will renew it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will state why it differs from those gentlemen who have expressed views in opposition to its ruling. The purport of the resolution is that absentees must respectfully make their excuses and submit to the judgment of the Convention. How can they submit to the judgment of the Convention if they are not present in person to do that? Suppose the judgment of the Convention should be that they be placed in arrest or subjected to a fine, they could not submit to the judgment of the Convention without being present in person to render their excuses and listen to the determination of the Convention upon it, and submit to arrest or pay the fine.

Mr. SEYMOUR—Will the Chair permit me to make one suggestion?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Any gentleman desiring to be purged of contempt will please rise.

Mr. FOWLER appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Fowler, you are before the bar of the Convention on a charge of violating its rule on being absent without leave. What excuse have you to offer for your absence?

Mr. FOWLER—I left on Saturday after the session of the Convention, intending to return in time for this morning's session. I was unable to do so. I could not have returned if I had felt disposed, on account of ill health, and if I had been present this morning and in a position to have made a motion when I came into the Convention, I should have made a motion to be excused from this evening's session. I believe this is about the first time, since the commencement of the Convention—since its organization—that I have been absent from any of its sessions.

Mr. FULLER—I move that Mr. Fowler's excuse be accepted.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Fuller and it was declared carried.

Mr. PRINDLE appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Prindle, you have been absent without leave; what excuse have you to offer for your absence?

Mr. PRINDLE—Mr. President. I would most respectfully state—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Chenango [Mr. Prindle] was excused.

Mr. PRINDLE—I understood that I was, but heard that I was in contempt.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I left here on Saturday afternoon, Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT, pro tem.—The Chair would respectfully submit that the gentleman [Mr. C. L. Allen] will have to appear before the bar of the Convention. If there are no objections, however, the gentleman can give his excuse in his place.

No objection was interposed.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I was about to remark that I left on Saturday afternoon, intending to return this morning by the early train of cars. I have generally answered to my name in my place, heretofore. This morning is the first time I have failed to answer. I should have reached here by ten or eleven o'clock, but for the illness of a member of my family, who requested me to remain until the afternoon train, in order that I might see how her state of health was. I arrived here in the afternoon train. Under these circumstances, I ask to be excused.

Mr. FLAGLER—I move that Mr. Allen's excuse be accepted.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Flagler, and it was declared carried.

Mr. JARVIS appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Jarvis, you were absent without leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. JARVIS—On account of illness in my family, I was compelled to remain over until this day. I am here at the earliest practicable moment, and ask to be excused.

Mr. SHERMAN—I move that Mr. Jarvis' excuse be accepted.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Sherman, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BEALS appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Beals, you were absent without leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. BEALS—I have to state that I unexpectedly left Albany on receipt of a letter from my family that two members of it were ill. I made arrangements with my colleague, Mr. Graves, that in case my name was called in question before my return, he should state my excuse. I have been informed by my colleague that he had no opportunity to state my excuse. My railroad station is Iliou. On consulting the time table with reference to that station gentlemen will find that the first available morning train passing east is at ten o'clock and twenty minutes, and it arrives here at half-past two. I took the first train this morning which would bring me to this point, and reached here at that hour. By way of courting the sympathy of this Convention, I wish to urge as an argument in my behalf, that this is the first speech I have made during the entire session, and I would have preferred to have been excused even on this interesting occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. N. M. ALLEN—I move that the excuse of Mr. Beals be accepted.

The question was put on the motion to excuse Mr. Beals, and it was declared carried.

Mr. WILLIAMS appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Williams, you have been absent without leave. What excuse have you to offer for your absence?

Mr. WILLIAMS—I find myself very much in the condition of the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Beals]. I recognize the justice of the action on the part of the Convention. I did not intend to leave the city over the past Sunday, but on Saturday morning I received a communication from my family that a brother-in-law and his family were at my house, who had not been there for nearly twelve years, and considerable solicitude was expressed that I should be at home to see them. I left this city with a determination and expectation that I could return this morning in season for the morning's session. Before reaching the terminus of the railroad, I learned that I was under a misapprehension in regard to the early train. The Cincinnati express is made up every Monday morning at Utica; my impression was I could come down on that train and be here in season. I learned my mistake, and then determined to come in the midnight train. On getting home, I found my relatives there, and that they intended to come east this morning, and knowing that my carriage must go to the depot with them, I ventured to remain and come with them. In view of the delay, I very much regret that I took that course. I am not aware that I have any extenuating circumstances to plead except this. I think I have

Mr. SHERMAN—I rise to a point of order. There is no question before the Convention.

Mr. POND—I renewed the appeal for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] to make his suggestion.

Mr. SHERMAN—The gentleman [Mr. Pond] had not the floor, and he could not do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman [Mr. Pond] now has it.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I was simply about to call the attention of the Chair to this distinction. Where a member is absent, and has left no one to make an excuse for him, no one is authorized to appear for him, and he appears here as a member giving such facts as may have come to his knowledge.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] could not have left one to make an excuse for his being in contempt, because he went away before the call was ordered.

Mr. SEYMOUR—That is true, but apprehending, as has often occurred, that there might not be a quorum, and a call of the Convention might be had, he requested me to present his excuse; and upon the well known principle, qui facit per alium, facit per se, I would suggest to the Chair that this is the excuse of the absentee himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair, with the permission of the Convention would state that the maxim qui facit per alium, facit per se cannot apply, because he cannot by another go into arrest. If the Convention so orders by resolution he must submit to the order of the Convention—that cannot be done by another.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—It appears to me this discussion has gone far enough. There is no sort of doubt but what every member of this Convention will be willing to excuse Judge Paige whenever they can get the opportunity to do it in accordance with the rules of the Convention. It is perfectly plain to me we cannot do it now. I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. ALVORD—Will the gentleman withdraw his motion for a moment?

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I will.

Mr. ALVORD—I wish to say in regard to this matter that it seems to me that the President, pro tem. is eminently right in the decision which he has come to and which decision has been appealed from by my friend from Saratoga [Mr. Pond]. The terms of the resolution itself are specific, in so many words, that the member himself must appear here and submit—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will inform the gentleman the word “appear” does not occur in the resolution.

Mr. ALVORD—Nevertheless—

Mr. MERRITT—I rise to a point of order, that debate is entirely out of order, the President pro tem. having decided that a motion to excuse the gentleman is not in order on account of the resolution.

Mr. ALVORD—The question, as I understand it, is upon the appeal of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond], and I hope I may be permitted to proceed. Gentlemen may do as they please in regard to that, but I propose to speak my opinions before this Convention. My friend from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt], is a little outside of the question—

Mr. TAPPEN—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I ask if the Convention did not adopt the practice, to some extent, of excusing absentees on the request of gentlemen present, and whether that practice was not carried to an extent this morning sufficient to make it the rule which the Convention has recognized during its proceedings this day, and whether, having adopted that practice, the Chair is not bound to conform to it?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will state that that was prior to the adoption of this resolution. The Chair based its decision entirely upon the resolution. The practice of excusing members by request of friends after a call of the House is announced has been usual. It has been done in Congress time and time again. But this resolution coming in, in the opinion of the Chair, changes the whole programme, and we must be confined to the resolution which certainly requires a personal appearance in terms, although not in words.

Mr. ALVORD—I will answer the question the gentleman [Mr. Tappen] has put to me. I think it is common sense and good ruling upon the part of this Convention that they should have permitted, even after the call was made, any one to make an excuse here; I consented to it. It is none the less true as a parliamentary rule that in every instance where a parliamentary rule has been departed from, the moment you are again on the right track that moment you are in the right direction. So far as regards this matter I wish to say to the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Seymour] in regard to Judge Paige, that I did not say what he has ascribed to me. I made the general remark that gentlemen would be in the habit of giving excuses for their friends which when their friends appeared here might not be the excuses which they desired to make. I did not base the remark on the case of Judge Paige at all, but I took the distinct position and made it a part of my remarks that I believed the statement in regard to Judge Paige, but that I desired an end should be put to these excuses as well upon him as anybody else so that we should not be continually jumping up and making excuses for persons who are absent. There were half a dozen gentlemen from the city of New York, who thinking it possible that a call of the Convention might be had, caught me by the coat as they were going away, and desired me to get up some excuse for them, standing upon this floor. I did not agree to do it in any case. It is for that reason I am opposed to granting excuses in behalf of Judge Paige or any one else, and I hope the decision of the Chair will be sustained.

Mr. BARKER—I move the previous question.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Barker, and it was declared carried.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on sustaining the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MORRIS—I understand from the sergeant-at-arms there are four gentlemen present who desire to be purged of contempt. I therefore move that their excuses be now received.

large districts or thirty-two single districts after full discussion.

Mr. RATHBUN—I am aware, sir, from conversation with members of the Convention not present that they desire to discuss the question upon the very first section of this article, and it was understood here on Saturday that the discussion upon this branch of the case would not be closed until Tuesday evening—certainly as late as that. I hope and trust no vote will be taken on the question until the Convention is more full, and until those gentlemen have a chance to enter into a discussion of this question of a division of districts—

Mr. BALLARD—Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment. I think I was misunderstood. I meant to be understood as not intending to come to a vote to-night.

Mr. RATHBUN—I move then that that section be passed over for the present, when other subjects may be discussed in their order, and this one left until the gentlemen come in to-morrow morning.

Mr. MERRITT—As the next section embraces the subject of enumeration, I hope we will pass that also, and take up the fourth section. If in order, I make that motion.

Mr. BARKER—Let us take up the subject of compensation this evening.

Mr. CHESEBRO—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. MERRITT—I hope not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—Will the gentleman [Mr. Chesebro] withdraw his motion for a moment?

Mr. CHESEBRO—I will withdraw it at the request of the gentleman.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I desire to make a suggestion. I do not know as it will meet with the approval of others. The amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] to strike out Westchester county from the second district seems to be a great stumbling block in the way of other amendments. It occurred to me that the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] might with the unanimous consent of the Convention withdraw his amendment long enough for the Convention to vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks]. That amendment involves no particular principle. Then the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] could renew his amendment.

Mr. BALLARD—The view of the previous Chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. Archer] was that the question would be properly taken on the amendment I offered first.

Mr. HATCH—Is a motion in order now to rise and report progress?

The CHAIRMAN—Such a motion is in order. Mr. HATCH—I think myself that the first question to be settled by the Convention is as to the number of districts. It is the important and controlling question; and therefore that question should be submitted to a full Convention. For that reason, sir, I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hatch, and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose and the President pro tem., Mr. FOLGER, resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. FULLER from the Committee of the Whole reported that the Committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., had made some progress therein but not having gone through therewith had instructed their Chairman to report that fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put upon granting leave and it was declared carried.

Mr. TAPPEN—I desire to give notice that I shall move an amendment to our rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The notice is not now in order, if there is any objection.

Mr. BALLARD—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Ballard and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

TUESDAY, August 6, 1867.

The Convention met at 10 o'clock, A. M.

Prayer was offered by Rev. PHILIP J. SMITH. The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY.

Mr. SCHELL—I perceive sir, that the Journal does not state that the Convention took a recess from two o'clock, until half-past seven.

Mr. FOLGER—I request that the Secretary may read again, that portion of the Journal.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read as follows:

"The hour of two o'clock having arrived, the point of order was raised, that pursuant to a resolution of the Convention, adopted on the 2d inst., a recess must now be taken. The President decided that the point of order was well taken, as to the fact of the adoption of such a resolution."

Mr. FOLGER—The Journal states that the Chair decided the point of order was well taken. The recollection of the member who occupied the Chair [Mr. Folger], is that he stated just precisely, what had been the previous action of the Convention, and said it must be for the Convention to determine for themselves, whether they would remain in their seats. The recollection of the member then occupying the chair, is that he did not say the point of order was well taken, but merely repeated what had been the action of the Convention on the previous day.

Mr. WEED—I would like to ask the gentleman if it was not the fact, that at two o'clock, the Convention dispersed, and that the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], being President pro tem., did not resume the chair until half-past seven.

Mr. FOLGER—When that point of order was raised, the person occupying the Chair, without deciding (as is his recollection) the point of order, simply stated what had been the action of the Convention, that is, the adoption of the resolution that there should be a recess from two o'clock, until half-past seven, and expressly left it to the Convention to decide what they would do. There was a dispersion of the members without a recess being declared, and there was a re-assembling of the members at half-past seven.

The PRESIDENT—The Journal will be corrected agreeably to that statement.

been here to answer to my name on all former roll calls.

Mr. COCHRAN—I move that Mr. Williams' excuse be accepted.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Cochran, and it was declared carried.

Mr. YOUNG appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Young, you were absent without leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. YOUNG—I am a magistrate of my town. A couple of weeks ago a cause was adjourned for Monday morning, supposing, at that time, that our session would not commence until half-past seven o'clock P. M., and that I could dispose of it and get here in time. At the earnest solicitation of the parties, this morning, I remained to hear the cause. I will further state that it would be impossible for me to arrive here by any means of conveyance at ten o'clock this morning, because the only train of cars that would have brought me here by ten o'clock leaves Poughkeepsie at 4.45 A. M., and it would be impossible for me to cross the river at that hour.

Mr. BELL—I move that the excuse of Mr. Young be accepted.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Bell, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I believe I am one of the unfortunate ones—

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The gentleman [Mr. Schoonmaker] will please take his place before the bar of the Convention.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER appeared before the bar of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Mr. Schoonmaker, you have been absent without leave. What excuse have you to offer for your absence?

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I left home this morning. I expected to have left by the five o'clock train, but last evening, when I was at tea, an old client of mine desired to have a consultation with me, and I, not usually attending to business on Sunday, put him off until this morning at eight o'clock. I saw him then, and left by the ten o'clock train and came up to this capital and when I came to the door of the chamber, as soon as I arrived, I could not gain admittance. That is my excuse.

Mr. BELL—I move that the excuse of Mr. Schoonmaker be accepted.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Bell, and it was declared carried.

Mr. KRUM—My colleague, Mr. Miller, obtained leave of absence through me on Saturday morning till to-morrow on account of sickness. I received a letter from him this evening, in which he states that he is under the care of a physician for rheumatism. His physician says it is not well for him to leave his house; he therefore, desires leave of absence for a week.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Is there any objection.

Mr. GREELEY—I object.

Mr. CONGER—I move that Mr. Miller be granted leave of absence.

Mr. ALVORD—I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Conger, and it was declared carried.

The Convention then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc. Mr. FULLER, of Monroe, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the pending question to be upon the amendment offered by Mr. Ballard to the amendment of Mr. Brooks to the article reported by the committee.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I would like to inquire whether it is now in order to move a substitute for the first section or not?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair understands there are two amendments pending, and it is not now in order.

Mr. MERRITT—I hope that the vote will not be taken upon this amendment offered by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], but that he will consent to pass it over informally, and take up other sections of the report. The Convention is not full now, and I know several gentlemen who desire to speak on the question pro and con. If in order I make that motion.

Mr. TAPPEN—I would like to have the questions now pending read for the information of the Convention. If the amendments are very extensive then a brief statement of them will do.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendments as requested.

Mr. WEED—I wish to ask to have the question upon the motion of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] divided, so that we may take the question first upon the number of single districts; second, upon the question of time; and, third, upon the apportionment suggested by the amendment proposed. The question is divisible, and I ask it now for fear that somebody may object to its being passed over. I ask it so that when the vote is going to be taken, it will be taken in the way I have suggested.

Mr. BALLARD—I will state here that the amendment offered by me calls simply for three propositions. One is to divide the State into thirty-two senatorial districts. The second is that each district shall be entitled to a Senator. The third is a distribution of territory, as it now exists on the statute book, made in 1866, only a year ago. My purpose was, when we came to vote, to have the question divided and to take the question first on the dividing of the State into senatorial districts. That having been acted upon, then to take up the question as to how many Senators we would have from those thirty-two districts, and the third was in regard to the territory. Now, I think, having debated this question of dividing the State into districts several days, we had better dispose of that question before we pass into a sea of other matters. Let us dispose of that, as to the division of the State into districts. The term of office is another open question—whether it shall be one or four years, and whether the Senators shall be classified or not. But I shall not ask a vote of this Convention until Wednesday, because I think it is better for the Convention to pass upon that question relative to the division of the State into eight

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order, and it is double. In the first place these are not the kind of words which can be made a part of the Journal, and in the next place the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] who offers it was not present yesterday, and, therefore, cannot know what took place.

Mr. POND—I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed].

The PRESIDENT—As to the first point of order the Chair thinks the Journal may be amended to correspond with the fact, and as to the second point the Chair is ignorant of the fact whether the gentleman was in his place or not.

Mr. POND—If it is material I have accepted the amendment, and I think the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] will admit that I was here.

Mr. ALVORD—I ask the Chair to rule that no other person than those who have been purged of contempt are authorized to vote upon this proposition.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair so rules.

Mr. NELSON—I would like to ask which are in contempt, those who went out of doors or those who went out of the windows? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. WEED—Did I understand those who were present in this Convention yesterday to deny the fact stated in that amendment, or is it because they are afraid to put the facts upon the record?

Mr. GOULD—It has been acknowledged by the President pro tem. that he left the chair, but that all the Convention abandoned their duties I do not know. There is no proof whatever that the whole Convention left their seats, and I know of no proof but what there was a faithful minority who remained here and made a continuous session, and I would not put it upon the Journal to that effect until the fact was established by some proper legitimate proof. How do these gentlemen who came here late yesterday, and who are proper witnesses, know that a faithful minority did not elect a President pro tem. and preserve a continuous session?

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I happened to be in the room a little after four o'clock, and there were only one or two persons here.

Mr. ALVORD—For the purpose of enabling this vote to be confined to those who were present, I ask for the ayes and noes upon this question.

Mr. HALE—I would state that it appears upon the Journal that I obtained leave of absence for half an hour. Upon my return I got into the hall with very great difficulty and found no President pro tem., and no Convention in session.

Mr. MERRITT—If I understand the duties of the Secretary, it is to record the proceedings of the Convention; and I hold there is nothing pertaining to that Journal except what the Secretary records, and there can be nothing beyond that which should go upon the Journal. Therefore whatever members did outside of that, or whether they went from this chamber, or whether they went to dinner or went away, ought not to go upon the Journal, and we have no right to put it upon the Journal.

Mr. WEED—The gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Weed] does not take the proper position. If members will admit that there was a recess, I will admit that it is not material to put it upon the record; but they say there was a recess in fact, but they deny it is proper that the fact should appear upon the record. The President pro tem. vacated the chair and left the room, and the members left the room, but the members here present will not allow it to go upon the record as an actual recess, as it really was in law.

Mr. TAPPEN—One word in response to the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould]; I was in this hall in the morning session, and from then until seven there was no session and no person in the chair. But two or three members of the Convention were in the hall, and no business was done from two o'clock until half-past seven, when the Convention re-assembled. These are facts which nobody proposes to gainsay or deny. Now, in respect to the objection of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt], that nothing should go upon the Journal except what the Secretary chooses to put there. That Journal is to contain what is ordered to go upon it, whether it be the minutes of the Secretary or not. Whatever this Convention direct to be put upon the Journal should be put upon the Journal.

Mr. FOLGER—I move the previous question.

The question was then put on the motion for the previous question, and it was declared carried.

The ayes and noes were called for, and a sufficient number seconding the call, they were ordered.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the roll.

The name of Mr. C. L. Allen was called.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I ask to be excused because I was not here, and do not know how to vote.

The question was put upon excusing Mr. C. L. Allen, which was declared lost.

Mr. BARKER—From the voices behind me I think that the members who are in contempt voted upon that last question.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair rules that they should not vote.

The name of Mr. C. L. Allen was called.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—It seems to me that it is a very great hardship to compel a man to vote upon a question of which he has no personal knowledge whatever.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I do not know that I can say any more. I am entirely ignorant of the facts as to the question now called. I was not present in the room, and I do not see how I can vote with truth either yea or nay.

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman has already addressed those considerations to the Convention.

The name of Mr. Beals was called.

Mr. BEALS—I certainly beg to be excused from voting on this occasion. At the last session I did not appear before the bar of the Convention to render my excuse until the rule had been established by which, all under censure should be received in the Convention, and I feel conscientiously, sir, that this matter which has been entered into by the minority of this Convention was fundamentally wrong. I do not profess to understand parliamentary usage in this matter, but at least I believe myself to be correct in this, that those who are equally censurable with others, ought not to

Mr. ALVORD—I would like to know how the Journal is to be corrected agreeably to that statement?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair simply wishes the decision of the President pro tem.

Mr. POND—I would like to state my recollection in regard to this matter, and if I am correct, it may make some difference with regard to the correction of the Journal. I understood the President pro tem. [Mr. Folger] yesterday, when the hour of two o'clock arrived to declare the Convention in recess, and afterward, if my recollection serves me (it was a very exciting time, and very likely my recollection does not serve me), the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] asked the Chair, if the Chair had made such a decision, and according to my recollection, the Chair responded it had, and thereupon I left the chamber.

Mr. ALVORD—I merely wish to say, I did ask the President pro tem. whether he had made such a decision, and he distinctly said he had not.

Mr. BARKER—I rise simply to state, that my recollection is in accordance with the remarks of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], who was the President pro tem., and I think the Journal should be corrected in accordance therewith.

Mr. SCHELL—I recollect the fact, that at a certain time, the attention of the President pro tem. [Mr. Folger] was called to the rule under which the Convention was to act, and that was that a recess should be taken at two o'clock until half-past seven. At the hour of two o'clock it was announced that the time had arrived, and the President pro tem. left the chair, and the members dispersed, so that the fact is the Convention took a recess at two o'clock and re-assembled at half-past seven, when the President pro tem. again took the chair.

Mr. FOLGER—There is a slight inaccuracy, not so much of fact, as of the collocation of the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Schell]. The President pro tem. did not announce the hour of two o'clock, and he made no announcement declaring a recess, and he did not leave the chair first, as might be implied by the phraseology of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Schell]. The members of the Convention had risen from their seats and had got into the passage ways, and some were going out, when the President pro tem. left the chair, and did not enter it again until half-past seven, and without calling the Convention to order, he inquired what was the further pleasure of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT—Does the gentleman [Mr. Folger] desire to move for a correction of the Journal?

Mr. FOLGER—I do, in that respect, and I offer the following as an amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

When the point of order was taken, the President pro tem. stated that he would declare what had been the previous action of the Convention, and did state that it had been previously resolved that the Convention should take a recess at two P. M., and should re-assemble at half-past seven P. M. that he would not declare a recess.

Mr. WEED—I desire the fact to appear that there was a dissolution of this body at two o'clock, and that they did not come together again until half-past seven o'clock, which is a fact.

Mr. WAKEMAN—Yesterday I was occupying a place near the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker]. When it was two o'clock I moved a recess until half-past seven, and it was declared lost. Then there was a question raised by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] as to what the Chair had decided.

Mr. ALVORD—I desired the President to say whether he had decided that we were in recess, and he distinctly said that he had not so decided.

Mr. WAKEMAN—That was so. My attention was called to it because it was within a minute or two of two o'clock, and the attention of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker] was also called to it, to know what the effect would be if a recess were taken; and my attention was directed to the President pro tem. until we dispersed, and the President pro tem. did not declare a recess according to my recollection, but intimated that members could disperse and meet again at half-past seven o'clock, when business would be resumed, and under that we all dispersed.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—I recollect when the gentleman from Genesee [Mr. Wakeman] moved a recess to be taken until half-past seven, and that motion was declared lost by the President pro tem., and a minute or two after when it was two o'clock, I called the attention of the President pro tem. to the rule which required we should take a recess until half-past seven, and I supposed he did declare a recess accordingly, and something was said which I supposed was an acquiescence in that rule; whereupon the Convention dispersed and assembled again at half-past seven. I suppose it is proper that the Journal should tell the truth, that we did disperse at two o'clock and re-assembled at half-past seven.

Mr. KETCHAM—I hope it may be made to appear on the Journal that there was a recess whether it was announced by the President pro tem. or not. I understood at the time that the recess was announced, but however that may be, I know that we took a recess with the doors locked, and we all got out of the house. We were pouring out of the house like a swarm of bees; out of the back door and windows, and I insist that the Journal shall show that we were not in session from two o'clock until half-past seven, and I would like to have it show how we got out.

Mr. POND—I move to add at the end of that amendment that we had vacated the chamber and re-assembled again at half-past seven.

Mr. WEED—I have an amendment in substance, the same as that which I have drawn out, which I ask to have inserted, that at two P. M. the Convention dispersed.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

"And that at two P. M. the Convention dispersed, the members left the chamber, and the President pro tem. left the chair and the chamber, and that the Convention re-assembled at half-past seven P. M., when"—

Mr. RATHBUN—I submit the gentleman is not entitled to vote unless permitted by the Convention.

Mr. HATCH—I did not ask to be excused.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands the gentleman did not ask to be excused.

Mr. RATHBUN—Then I move the gentleman should be advised that he is disorderly.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair did so advise him.

The name of Mr. Loew was called.

Mr. LOEW—I was not here yesterday, and have no personal knowledge of what transpired. I was away upon leave of absence, but from what transpired here this morning I am satisfied that the gentlemen did disperse, and I believe that fact is not denied, therefore I vote "aye."

The name of Mr. Reynolds was called.

Mr. REYNOLDS—I ask to be excused, as I was absent on leave and did not return until this morning.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Reynolds, and it was declared carried.

The name of Mr. L. W. Russell was called.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL—I ask to be excused. Although I was present, I am unable to say from my own knowledge whether the President pro tem. left the chamber or not.

The question was put on excusing Mr. L. W. Russell, and it was declared lost.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL—Then believing it to be the fact, as stated in the amendment, I vote "aye."

The name of Mr. Sherman was called.

Mr. SHERMAN—I ask to be excused from voting. I was not here yesterday between the hours of two and half-past seven, and consequently I have no knowledge of the facts which are involved in this question.

The question was put on excusing Mr. Sherman, and it was declared carried.

The name of Mr. M. I. Townsend was called.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I ask to be excused. I was present in the Convention, and know that between seventy and eighty members of this Convention know the facts to be precisely as contained in the proposed amendment. I further know that the rules of this Convention would have rendered the acts of this body between two and half-past seven nugatory, and irregular, and disorderly, had they continued in session or not. I find men whose parliamentary knowledge is very great, mine being none at all, assume that the keeping of this matter off the record is of such importance as renders it necessary to spend a large portion of the morning when we have got a quorum here, and therefore I fear that I may be doing a great wrong in voting to put the truth upon the record, and I ask to be excused.

The question was put on excusing Mr. M. I. Townsend, and it was declared lost.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I vote "aye."

Mr. BEADLE—My name has not been called, and I rise to inquire why.

Mr. BEADLE—I suppose that under rule 33, which says there must be a quorum—

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman is in contempt.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will receive the gentleman's reason at the proper time.

Mr. BEADLE—Is it not a privileged question.

The PRESIDENT—It is a privileged question, but not so far privileged as to override the call of the roll.

The SECRETARY completed the call of the roll, and the amendment of Mr. Pond was declared carried, by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Ballard, Barnard, Barto, Bergen, Bickford, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Champlain Chesebro, Cochran, Corbett, Corning, Daly, Eddy, Endress, Hale, Harris, Hatch, Hitchman, Jarvis, Ketcham, Krum, Landon, Loew, Mattice, Merwin, Morris, A. J. Parker, C. E. Lawrence, Ludington, Merritt, Opdyke, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Root, Rumsey, Seaver, Spencer, Van Campen, Van Oot, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—40.

Mr. SHERMAN—By the vote just taken, the Convention has virtually declared that the proceedings under the call last evening were irregular.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will remind the gentleman that the pending question is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], as amended by the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond].

Mr. LAPHAM—I move a further amendment.

Mr. WEED—I rise to a point of order that the previous question has been ordered.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Folger, as amended on motion of Mr. Pond, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SHERMAN—I said that by the vote just taken, the Convention had virtually decided—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will state that the pending question now is, are there any amendments to the Journal? There being none, the Journal will be approved.

Mr. SHERMAN—The Convention having virtually decided that the proceedings of last night were irregular, I move that the vote on the amendment, which was adopted on my motion, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will state that the Journal having been approved, and showing the fact of a recess being taken at two o'clock, by that recess the call and all proceedings under it were terminated.

Mr. WEED—Is it not in order, then, to expunge that portion of the Journal by which it appears that myself and other gentlemen came in under the custody of the sergeant-at-arms?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair has decided the Journal correct.

Mr. BELL presented the petition of Leander Douglas and thirty-two other citizens of the town of Lyme, asking the right to catch fish in the consisting of the head officers and professors of the colleges, academies and other institutions of learning in the State, subject to the visitation of the Board of Regents, will be held at the lecture room of the State Agricultural Society in this city, commencing this day, and is expected to continue three days.

The members of the Convention over which you preside are invited to attend the sessions, and will be cordially welcomed by the officers and members of the Convocation.

Very respectfully yours,

JOHN V. L. PRUYN,
Chancellor of the University.

S. B. WOOLWORTH,
Secretary.

Mr. E. BROOKS — I move that this invitation be accepted.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. E. Brooks, and it was declared carried.

Mr. AXTELL — I ask leave of absence for Mr. Clinton, of Erie, for to-day, who is unexpectedly required to be absent.

The question was put on granting leave of absence to Mr. Clinton, and it was declared carried.

Mr. HALE — I ask leave of absence for myself for one week from to-day. The reasons are owing to the necessity of being home on account of business of importance to the people of the locality I represent.

The question was then put on granting leave of absence to Mr. Hale, and it was declared carried.

Mr. AXTELL — I ask leave of absence for this week, for my colleague, Mr. Cheritree, on account of sickness in his family.

The question was then put on granting leave of absence for Mr. Cheritree, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SMITH — I ask leave of absence for myself, to-morrow and the day following, to transact some business which cannot be deferred.

The question was then put on granting Mr. Smith leave of absence, and it was declared carried.

Mr. HAMMOND — I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. Farnum, who will necessarily be detained until Thursday, having been telegraphed to return home.

The question was put on granting Mr. Farnum leave of absence, and it was declared carried.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Town and County officers, etc., submitted the following report:

The Committee on Town and County Officers, other than judicial, their Election or Appointment, Tenure of Office, Compensation, Powers and Duties, respectfully submit as a substitute for Article X, of the present Constitution, the following:

ARTICLE —

SECTION 1. There shall be elected in each county by the qualified voters therein, at the time of holding general elections, a sheriff, county treasurer, county clerk, county supervisor, and as many coroners as may be prescribed by the Legislature; who shall hold their offices respectively for the term of three years, unless sooner removed by competent authority. Sheriffs shall hold no other office during their incumbency, and shall not be re-eligible, act as under-sheriff or deputy for the succeeding term; but the retiring sheriff shall finish all business remaining in his hands at the expiration of his term, for which purpose his commission and official bond shall continue in force. They may be required to renew their security from time to time, and in default of giving such new security, their offices shall be deemed vacant. The county shall never be responsible for their acts. The Governor may remove any officer in this section mentioned, for incapacity, neglect of duty, malfeasance, intemperance, turpitude or crime, first giving to such officer a copy of the charges against him, and an opportunity of being heard in his defense.

§ 2. There shall be appointed in each county by the Governor, a district attorney, who shall hold his office for the term of three years, unless sooner removed by competent authority. The Governor may remove the district attorney for incapacity, neglect of duty, malversation, intemperance, turpitude or crime, first giving to such officer a copy of the charges against him, and an opportunity of being heard in his defense.

§ 3. There shall be elected in each organized town by the qualified electors therein, at such time as the Legislature may prescribe, one supervisor, one town clerk, one collector, one or three assessors as the electors may determine, and as many commissioners of highways and overseers of the poor as may be prescribed by law. The supervisor shall hold his office for the term of two years, and the other officers in this section mentioned for the term of one year, unless sooner removed by competent authority.

§ 4. All county and town offices (except judicial) which may be in existence on the adoption of this Constitution, shall thereafter continue, with the powers, duties, and incidents thereto pertaining, until abrogated or modified by law; and the incumbents of said offices, and also the several officers mentioned in this article, shall retain the powers, and perform the duties pertaining to their respective offices at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, until the same are changed or modified by law. The Legislature may, by general laws, create such new town and county offices, not inconsistent with the provisions of this Constitution, as the public weal shall require; abrogate such town and county offices as are not specifically established by this article; regulate the election of all officers named in this article, and provide for the election or appointment of such as are not herein named; prescribe the powers and duties of all county and town officers, except judicial; provide for the giving of security by any of said officers for the faithful discharge of their duties; provide for the removal of all county and town officers (except judicial) for whose removal provision is not otherwise made in this article; declare the cases in which any such office shall be deemed vacant, and provide for filling vacancies in office; but in case of elective officers, no person appointed to fill a vacancy, shall hold his office by virtue of such appointment, longer than the balance of the term in which such vacancy occurs.

§ 5. All county and town officers shall reside within their respective counties and towns, and shall keep their respective offices at such places therein as may be directed by law. And all such officers shall be subject to indictment for malfeasance, misfeasance or neglect of official duty; and upon conviction thereof, their offices shall become vacant.

§ 6. The county supervisor and town supervisors chosen in each county, shall constitute a board to be known as "The board of supervisors of the county of _____," by which name they may sue and be sued; and in which capacity they may make and use a common seal, and enact ordinances and by-laws not inconsistent with the laws of the State. They shall meet stately, at least once in each year, at the county seat of their county, and may hold special and adjourned meetings; and shall have such powers, and perform such duties as a board, as may belong to and devolve upon boards of supervisors at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, or as may thereafter be prescribed by law. They shall appoint a clerk, who shall keep a journal of their proceedings, and transact such other business pertaining to his office as may be by them or by law required, and whose compensation shall be fixed by them, and paid from the county treasury.

§ 7. The board of supervisors of each county, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, shall, under such general regulations as may be prescribed by law, have exclusive legislative and administrative power over, and superintendence and control of, such local and internal affairs and fiscal concerns within their county as are not otherwise provided by this Constitution; including the establishment, construction, regulation, and discontinuance of roads, public landings, ferries and bridges, except over navigable streams; the establishment, incorporation, regulation, and discontinuance of plank, turnpike, and macadamized roads, and horse railroads; the raising of money by loan or tax for town, village, or county purposes; the confirmation of the proceedings of towns and incorporated villages, and of county, town, and village officers (other than judicial); the relief of county, town, and village officers (other than judicial), from penalties incurred in the discharge or neglect of official duty; the purchase, management, and sale of real estate and personal property, for the use and benefit of the county; the erection of new towns and wards, changing the names thereof, and the alteration of town and ward boundaries; the widening, deepening, straightening, and cleaning of the channels of streams (except navigable streams), and the drainage of swamps and marshes; the correction of erroneous and illegal assessments, and refunding of moneys collected or paid on such assessments, the compensation of town and county officers, except supervisors, which shall be fixed by the Legislature; the care and support of town and county poor; together with such other matters of a local and internal character as the Legislature may prescribe; and also all other matters in regard to which boards of supervisors may have jurisdiction at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, subject to such changes and modifications as may thereafter be made by law, in accordance with this Constitution.

§ 8. The county supervisor shall be president of the board of supervisors, and shall have all the powers, and perform all the duties pertaining to the office of chairman of the board at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, and such as may thereafter be prescribed by law; Provided, however, That he shall not be entitled to vote upon any question before the board, except in case of a tie, when he may give the casting vote. All acts and resolutions of the board shall, upon the passage thereof, and during the session of the board at which the same were passed, be signed by the president, with his approval or disapproval thereof; and no act or resolution thus disapproved shall be valid unless upon reconsideration of the same, a majority of all the members elected shall agree to its passage notwithstanding such disapproval.

§ 9. The Legislature may, by law, provide for an increase and equalization of representation in the boards of supervisors, by an election of representative supervisors from towns, villages and cities, with such powers and duties as members of said boards, but not otherwise, as may be prescribed by law.

EXPLANATION.

Your committee have deemed it unwise to propose many changes in the tenure of office, or in the powers and duties of town and county officers.

Most of these officers are our common law inheritance. Their names and functions are familiar to the people—their powers, duties, limitations, and responsibilities, well defined by a long series of adjudications. No change should be made which does not promise advantages, clearly and decidedly outweighing the inconveniences that necessarily attend any change in the organic law of a State. But, in obedience to the public demand, and in accordance with their own judgment, your committee have incorporated in the foregoing proposed article the following new features, to-wit:

1. Additional and exclusive legislative and administrative jurisdiction is given to boards of supervisors, in relation to local and internal affairs, and fiscal concerns within their respective counties. This change, it is believed, is imperatively demanded. The vast and varied local interests of the State annually press with great severity upon the Legislature. A very large proportion of its acts are of a strictly local character, in which the people at large have no direct interest.

Members are naturally more interested in the affairs of their immediate constituents, who made them, than in the interests of the State at large; and hence, general legislation is pushed aside to give place to local and private schemes. It often happens that the merits of these schemes are known only to the local members who have them in charge, and who, perhaps, are employed as attorneys or agents to engineer them through the Legislature for a consideration. Moreover, these private and local schemes give occasion for the exercise of that peculiar species of legislative tactics known as "log-rolling." Worse than all, they give employment to that class of venal go-betweens known as "lobbyists," who annually infest the Legislature, and "ply their vocation" with a skill, perseverance and success worthy of a better cause. The change proposed would transfer local questions to local boards, where they could be properly ventilated and understood. It would greatly lessen the facilities for corruption, and leave the Legislature to pursue with honesty and deliberation, its legitimate business of general legislation.

2. This large increase of power in the local boards, suggests the propriety of some check upon hasty, inconsiderate and corrupt legislation.

To supply this want a county supervisor is proposed, who is to act as president of the board of supervisors, have a casting vote in case of a tie, and a veto power.

Elected by the whole county, he would represent the county, and not any particular locality or interest.

From the importance and dignity of the office, it may reasonably be supposed that it would be filled by men of character, who would bring ability and experience to the aid of the board in the discharge of its important duties. Sitting as a member of the board, and listening to its discussions, he would be prepared to promptly interpose a veto in cases demanding his interference.

3. The inequality of representation existing in boards, as at present constituted, has caused considerable complaint. For example, Watervliet, in the county of Albany, with a population of 27,000 and upward, has only one representative in the board; while several towns in the same county, with a population of less than 3,000, have each one representative, and power in the board equal to the populous and wealthy town of Watervliet. In the county of Fulton, one town has a population of about 10,000, and another of about 600, yet they are equal in representation and power in the board. This inequality exists to a greater or less extent in most of the counties of the State; and with an increase of legislative power in the board it would be more sensibly felt.

To remedy the difficulty, authority is conferred upon the Legislature to provide for an increase and equalization of representation, by an election of representative supervisors from towns, villages and cities, to act as members of the county boards. This provision would cure the evil complained of, without disturbing the present familiar system. Town supervisors would exist as before, with the same undivided powers and duties. They would act in their individual and independent capacity as town supervisors, and also as members of the county board of supervisors; while the representative supervisors would act only as members of the county board.

4. The term of supervisors is increased from one to two years. It was thought that the increased duties and importance of the office under the proposed change would, for obvious reasons, make a longer term desirable.

It will be observed that the leading and most important of these changes is the transfer of local legislation from the Legislature to the boards of supervisors. The others are mainly subordinate to and complementary of this. As a whole they form, in connection with existing provisions, a complete system, which it is thought will meet the public demand without essentially disturbing the present order of things, or producing any serious inconveniences.

5. The district attorney is to be appointed by the Governor. His office is not representative, and there is no good reason why it should be elective by popular vote. On the contrary, there are cogent reasons why it should be removed as far as possible from the political arena, and its incumbent made independent of the favor, caprice and resentment of those most likely to receive his official attentions.

It is not to be expected that a district attorney will be zealous in the prosecution of those to whom he owes his position; and there is too much reason to believe that, under our elective system, many offenders go "unwhipped of justice" solely for the reason that they have a "friend at court" in the person of the prosecuting officer.

The appointive system would not only remedy this evil, but secure a higher grade of incumbents. Grant that many able and worthy men fill the office under the elective system, it is true, nevertheless, that in many cases men totally unfit for the position, intellectually, morally, and professionally, are foisted into office. This result is produced by a skillful manipulation of the political wires, the power of caucus, a corruption fund at the polls, and the votes of those who desire immunity from the penalties of violated law.

The high position of the Chief Executive of the State, his personal responsibility, and the pride he would naturally feel in the success of his administration, would insure a judicious exercise of the appointing power; and there is good reason to believe that the change proposed would result in a purer, and more efficient administration of criminal law.

These are the only material changes that a majority of your committee have felt at liberty to recommend. And, in this connection, it may be proper to state that there was not entire unanimity in the committee on the question of the appointment of district attorney, a minority preferring his election by the people.

The other provisions of the article submitted, embrace substantially the features of the present Constitution and laws upon the same subject, so combined and expressed as to present in our written Constitution a complete system.

The subject assigned to your committee is so intimately connected with several others, that they have found it difficult to discharge their duties without trenching, or seeming to trench, upon ground assigned to other committees. They have endeavored to avoid this as far as practicable; but, doubtless, more or less modifications of the article reported by them will be required to harmonize it with other parts of the Constitution as they may be reported by committees, or adopted by the Convention.

Your committee having performed the duty imposed upon them, ask to be discharged from that further consideration of the subject, and of all matters relating thereto which have been referred to them.

ALBANY, August 6, 1867.

H. E. SMITH, Chairman.
M. BICKFORD,
ABRAHAM LAWRENCE,
O. H. P. KINNEY,

Except as to the appointment of Dist. Attorney.
W. B. SHELDON.

The undersigned, while uniting in the above report, nevertheless dissents from so much of the report as relates to the term of office of supervisors, and to the election of county treasurers. I prefer one year as the term of office of supervisors, and the appointment of county treasurers by the boards of supervisors.

M. BICKFORD.

Except as to the mode of appointment of district attorneys, and also further as to the election of town officers, believing that it will be an improvement to elect one or more assessors in each county as county officers.

JOHN P. ROLFE.

The PRESIDENT — The report will be referred to the Committee of the Whole and ordered to be printed, and, if there is no objection, the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. SHERMAN — In connection with the report I offer the following resolution which I desire to be sent to the Committee on Printing.

Resolved, That there be printed of the report of the standing Committee on Town and County Officers other than Judicial, etc., recommending an article of constitutional amendment, two thousand extra copies for the use of the Convention.

Mr. KETCHAM — I offer the following resolution.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the proceedings recorded upon the Journal declaring certain members of this Convention in contempt at the session of the Convention held at half-past seven P. M. on the 5th day of August, 1867, and the recitals in said Journal, declaring that certain members were brought to the bar of the Convention under charge of the sergeant-at-arms and excused, etc., be expunged from the Journal of the Convention.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. KETCHAM — I offer the following resolution:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the street between the Capitol and Congress Hall be closed, and kept closed during the further sessions of the Convention.

Mr. KETCHAM — I ask for the immediate consideration of that. It is a question of privilege, and it is utterly impossible by reason of the constant rattling of carriages, for us in this part of the chamber, to hear anything that goes on in the Convention. The street is not a public street, but it belongs to the State, and for this reason, I ask it be closed.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Ketcham, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. DALY — Instead of asking a special committee with reference to the petition which I have the honor to present, in reference to personal representation, I ask for the reference to the Committee of the Whole having that subject in charge.

There being no objection the petition took the reference requested.

Mr. RATHBUN — I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution in regard to the closing the street was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LAPHAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the roll of delegates be called after the reading of the Journal, each day and the names of all delegates absent without leave shall be entered in the Journal for the day.

Mr. WEED — I rise to debate that resolution.

The resolution giving rise to debate was laid over under the rule.

Mr. TAPPEN — I offer the following resolution.

Resolved, That the sessions of this Convention on Mondays, commence at half-past seven P. M.

Mr. GREELEY — On that I ask the yeas and noes.

Mr. RATHBUN — I rise to a point of order.

There is a standing rule on that subject now — that the Convention shall meet on each succeeding Monday in the evening.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair will accept the explanation of the gentleman, [Mr. Rathbun]. The rule has been created in its absence. That being the fact the resolution is not now in order.

Mr. TAPPEN — I am not aware that this Convention by any rule has adopted an hour for the evening session on Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN — I think the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun] is mistaken as to the adoption of any rule. There is an order adopted which specifies it shall be the order of the Convention until otherwise ordered, regulating the sessions on these days, but no rule has been adopted in that manner.

Mr. RATHBUN — Then it must be attacked in a different mode.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair understands the resolution of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] does not conflict with the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN — I ask the reading of the resolution which was adopted on Friday.

The resolution giving rise to debate, was laid over under the rule.

Mr. GREELEY — I move the following resolution on the same subject as that of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham]:

Resolved, That the roll of the Convention be called each day directly after the reading of the Journal, and every member who shall appear to be absent without leave shall thereupon be fined six dollars, to be deducted by the Comptroller in paying his compensation.

The resolution giving rise to debate, was laid over under the rule.

The Convention resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee of the Legislature, its Organization, etc., Mr. FULLER, of Monroe, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the pending question to be upon the amendment offered by Mr. Ballard to the amendment offered by Mr. E. Brooks, to the article reported by the committee.

Mr. BALLARD called for a division of the question.

Mr. FLAGLER — I wish to inquire if the first part of the proposition, providing for thirty-two districts, is adopted, and the other part in regard to making an apportionment, is voted down, whether it would be in order then for me to move the substitute which I indicated the other day.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion it will then be in order.

Mr. BALLARD—In calling for a division of the question, I wish it to be taken on the first sentence of the amendment, the one dividing the State into thirty-two districts.

Mr. BARKER—If the committee are now about to come to a vote on the amendment of the gentlemen from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], I wish to make a statement. There has been considerable feeling manifested against the report of the committee in regard to the manner in which they have apportioned the districts of the State. I wish to say that the members favoring the large districts, in making this vote, will regard it as voting for the principle of the large districts, and if it shall be sustained, the manner of dividing the State, if we divide it at all, it will be considered applicable, and gentlemen will vote upon the principle of large or small districts.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I wish to inquire of the Chair whether it would be in order to pass over this resolution, and consider other parts of the report?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that it is not now in order, that the Convention having decided in what order the Committee shall proceed, the committee cannot depart from it without the permission of the Convention.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—As I understand the motion, it is whether our districts shall be large or small. Before voting affirmatively upon the large district system I would prefer that some modification should be made of the first section, which has been passed over rather informally. I would ask whether the Chair thinks a proposition relating to that would be now in order.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion it is not in order.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I will detain the Convention but a minute in reading what I propose, to add to the first section.

Sec. 1. Every elector of this State shall be eligible for any of the offices herein named.

The supreme legislative power of this State is vested in a Senate and Assembly.

The Legislature at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, and from time to time thereafter shall confer upon the several boards of town, county, village and city officers, the necessary and appropriate powers of legislation and administration for the local government of their several districts.

I will further remark that this is giving force to the dormant seventeenth section of the old Constitution, which is in these words: "The Legislature may confer on the boards of supervisors of the several counties of the State, such further powers of local legislation and administration as they shall from time to time prescribe." I will only remark that another committee has just reported a code in reference to this subject, which apparently requires some such form in the act we are about to perfect. With these remarks I submit it to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN—It is not now in order.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I will move it when it is in order. I am prepared to vote negatively on the large district system until I know something about it.

Mr. EVARTS—I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the sense of the Convention will be intelligently and deliberately expressed upon the principle of the organization of the Senate, now fairly before it, separated entirely from any embarrassment or dissatisfaction that may find place in the minds of any members in regard to the actual or even the probable apportionment of the Senate through the State. I hope also, sir, that this sense of the Convention will be expressed upon this general principle, separated entirely from any predilections or aversions that may find place in the mind of any member in respect to the somewhat novel mode of taking the suffrage, which is included in the proposition of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. For that novel mode, concerning which much may be said that is interesting, and much may be said that is useful, can be as well applied to a system which divides the State into eight senatorial districts as into fifteen; and on the other hand those of us who have committed ourselves to the large districts, are not necessarily nor finally bound to a specific number of eight, if good reasons can be given why, nevertheless, there should be a somewhat larger number of districts. The proposition, as I take it, sir, is this, whether in arranging for the use of the suffrage, in the election of one of the houses, there shall be an effort at this compound senate district which should enable, in the arrangement of that branch of the Legislature, these two important ideas to be carried out. First, that there shall be an extension of the area of the suffrage from which, by election, these Senators are to derive their power, that will reserve the representation in that branch of the Legislature from localization and control by minor and limited arrangements of every kind. Secondly, whether by this compound district system, and from the introduction of the number of four Senators as representatives of the same constituency, there may be a convenient and a symmetrical and a reasonable mode for securing greater permanence and continuity in the constitution of that branch of the Legislature. The importance of this cannot be over-estimated, in my judgment. For it will be observed at once that, although it is possible by the single district system to preserve, in a modified form, the continuity of the existence of the Senate by providing that only in certain parts of the State, once in each year, elections shall take place, and thus the whole State be consulted only once in four years, yet that is much the best mode of securing the continuity of the representation in the Senate which appeals to the whole State and to every voter in the State at each annual election, to give his suffrage in respect to the member of the Senate that is to be chosen. I think, therefore, that all gentlemen who favor this longer term, and this provision of continuity in the body by separating the election into classes, must feel that the compound system gives so much the more real and thorough opportunity for the carrying out of these ideas as to lengthening the term, than the separation of the single districts into classes for annual election. The voters, under this latter system, must feel that they are excluded, except once in four years, from any voice in the constitution of the Senate; whereas, under the system by which the districts are large, all the voters cast their votes for the Senator representing that district annually. One Senator comes to be elected every year, and every voter in the State votes every year in respect to the constitution of the Senate. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am disposed to think that the question before the Convention is one of the most important, both in the minds of the members and in the feelings, wishes, and thoughts of the people of this State, that is likely to engage our attention. I believe that the real public demand for a Convention, and a revision of the Constitution, attaches itself more to an interest in and a dissatisfaction with the condition of the Legislature of the State, and of the Judiciary of the State than to any other topics that are included within the purview of the Constitution. I agree that, in regard to a certain important matter of administration, that is for the arrangement of the government of cities of large population, there is certainly great interest felt, and it is one of the most difficult and important subjects that is to come before us. But that is, after all, but a question of administration, and in regard to the Legislature and the judiciary, I think there is a conviction in the minds of the people of this State that there needs to be an elevation, a conformation, a purification of both of those fundamental departments of this government, as they are of all free governments. Now, as I understand the propositions presented and enforced here in favor of a single district system for the Senate, they class themselves under one or the other of these two heads; first, that of contentment, for there is no evil to be corrected; and, second, of despair of correcting it, if there be an evil that needs correction. If I agreed with my friend from Bensselaer county [Mr. M. I. Townsend] opposite me, who so justly connects wisdom with gray hairs, that there was nothing in the constitution of the Senate that unfavorably contrasted with the body as it was arranged and filled under the old Constitution, I would agree with him that we should not experiment in mere circumstantial changes having no necessity. I will agree that changes without substance are not desirable. Changes without real and grave reasons even are not to be encouraged. But I must appeal to the expression in every form, as it comes from members of this Convention, to every channel of public sentiment, whether at the hustings or in the newspapers, whether in the legislative bodies themselves or in the deliberations of independent organizations, of citizens who seek some remedy for the ills under which we suffer, that the condition of the Legislature is not satisfactory. I shall spend no more time upon this proposition than to say, that that gentleman was unfortunate in the single point of comparison, to which he attracted the attention of this body, between the old Senate and the new. Corruption does not exist in organizations, it exists in individuals. It exists in our human, imperfect condition. When he says that corrupt men were elected under the old system as well as under the new, he touches nothing but this imperfection of our nature, and we come to the point which alone institutes comparison between the two organizations, when we inquire whether the old organization rejected the intrusion of corruption, and whether the new one cherishes and retains it. There is the point; that the only instance of corruption finding place in the old Senate, adduced by the gentleman, was evidenced by the expulsion of Senators inculpated. But who has seen anything like action tending in that direction in the body as composed under the present system of election? I say, then, that, talking as we are, not of human nature, which we cannot remodel, but of organization which we can, and are called upon to remodel, the argument only is, that the old organization not only tended to exclude, but actually expelled impurities from it. Now, Mr. Chairman, if it be conceded that we need to pay some attention to the organization of the Legislature, in order that what is strong and pure may be confirmed, and what is weak and corrupt may be rejected, what modes have we at our command? Manifestly, within the limits of the proposition, nothing but a change of the basis of the suffrage, which no one professes, and which certainly I do not desire, or a prolongation of the term, or a remodeling of the district of suffrage. What have we within our power with regard to the remodeling of the district of suffrage but the question of an enlargement of the district or of the retention of the present single district? What have we, then, but this precise question before us, and this proves what I have stated before, that beyond the argument that the Senate is satisfactory, there is no other argument for the retention of the present system than of despair of making it better, however much it needs improvement. Is there any escape from this proposition? It seems to me not. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Bergen], himself so pure and honest, and representing, in his opinion, a region free from corruption, gives us what is supposed to be an axiom of moral or political philosophy. The gentleman says that the stream cannot rise higher than its fountain. I am not disposed to think we have any such certainty in the movement of moral and political influences as that which controls this physical law, with which the analogy is suggestive. But, sir, does not the gentleman know and feel that, though the stream cannot rise higher than the fountain, it may fall much lower, and that in its course it may imbibe many contaminations that it does not derive from its source? We cannot remodel society. We cannot restore human nature from its depravity. What we are occupied with is the practical considerations of what is within our power, and what is attributed to our duty. This power and this duty are limited to provide an organization by which, if the fountain be pure, the stream shall be kept as high and as pure as the fountain. These being the limits, then, within which we act, is there anything in this proposition that, after all our efforts to attain the benefits which, theoretically, are conceded may be derived from a larger constituency, yet practically, it will all fall back into the control and routine of local machinery. This, Mr. Chairman, is the argument of despair. This is an abdication of all effort, of all will, of all courage, of all sagacity, of all prudence, on our part, and to leave the evil as it is, as a necessary consequence of the arrangement of our society, and, so, remediless. Now, sir, is it not apparent that if you, in your organization, lay out a system according to which, upon its fair working, there is an opportunity for the suffrage, and an opportunity for the public service, to bring the representation to a higher level than it occupies upon the existing system; and if the history of the State enables a practical comparison between the standard, as it was reached and maintained under the large district system, and the standard as it has been reached and maintained under the small district system, that if this test of experience and the teaching of reason, we can bring to it, both show us that there is an opportunity for better influences and for better results under the large district system, we do our duty, and we do but our duty, when, under the combined instruction thus given to us by experience and reason, we adopt the system of large districts. I will agree that the fundamental difficulty, which our form of government is no more free from than any other, that the selfish objects of those who desire to govern, not for the public good, but for their own share in the private advantages of government, will attack every form of organization, will invade every method and style of the public service, and will constantly require the persistent efforts of all good men to keep up the standard of public and political morality and action to a level suitable to the true service of the State. But, it is said, in the conventions which shall nominate for the large senate districts these influences of locality will manifest themselves in the presence and efforts of the delegates. That is true. But in the present system there is no check upon the localizing influence, for local delegates constitute the whole body in the single districts to pass upon nominations. If there be anything in this arrangement of the large districts in the particulars to which I now ask attention, it is that, although local arrangements are likely to follow, and cannot be wholly prevented, yet every part of the district is able to hold the rest to the condition that, in consulting the fair share of local representation, they, nevertheless, are to furnish candidates that shall be acceptable throughout the senate district, and that may be fairly and properly accredited with due pride and confidence by the whole district as worthy to represent the whole. It being established, therefore, that in the primary and nominating conventions we may gain something in their action of a more liberal and elevated character, let us see whether these better Senators, when once chosen, are not better situated, in the largeness of their constituencies, to serve the general public interest; whether they do not gain a larger area of independent, disinterested, intelligent observers of their senatorial course, upon whom, perhaps, they may fall back for vindication, and, if need be, for re-election; whether a Senator who, after he is chosen, allows himself inadequate to his position as a representative of the large constituency, but serving always the selfish and narrow views of the local interests of his personal residence, will not find that this desertion of duty is visited upon him by the resentment and the rejection of the large constituency.

At this point the gavel fell, twenty minutes having expired.

MR. POND.—So far as the report of the majority of the committee proposes to increase the compensation of members of the Legislature, it has my unqualified assent. In my judgment very many if not the greater portion of the evils complained of as resulting from the present system are properly traceable to the fact, that members of the Legislature are not now provided with an adequate compensation. In theory a rule that requires the representatives of the people, to perform the public business, at their own expense comparatively, in addition to the time necessarily devoted to that object, is a vicious one, and cannot be defended on any satisfactory principle. There is no reason why a private individual should be selected to do the business of the State without receiving a just and adequate compensation. The people are able to discharge all just claims upon them. The State is neither a mendicant nor a miser, that any citizen devoting his time and performing labor in her behalf should do so to any extent gratuitously; and should such a rule universally obtain, the result would be to impose the obligation of holding office and discharging the duties incident thereto upon the wealthy class of citizens, thereby creating a species of moneyed aristocracy—a kind of privileged class—the existence of which is wholly inconsistent with our free institutions. The only alternative to this would be the choice of men for legislators not able pecuniarily to bear their own expenses at the State capital, and the necessary result of that system would be such official action on the part of the members as to supply by the drippings of unclean legislation the want of an adequate compensation. In practice, too, such has been the result, if we can correctly judge from the almost unanimous voice of the people and the press upon this subject. Nor is this all. In this country, where there is no aristocracy of wealth, but where very nearly every man is practically as well as theoretically the “architect of his own fortune,” no man having important business of his own, no man of energy or of enterprise, will be willing to surrender his own business, neglect his own affairs, and voluntarily engage in the business of the State, and devote his time and talents to the good of the public at his own expense. It is apparent that such a principle would operate disastrously upon the best interests of the State. Indeed it has so operated in practice. The man who has nothing else to do, is the one who can attend to politics and run party conventions, and thus manage and control elections. The effect has been to throw a class of men into the Legislature, not able in fact to work without pay, and hence, it is to be feared, too much of bad and corrupt legislation has been the result. I repeat, much of this will be avoided by adopting the proposition of the committee in respect to the compensation of members. But the committee go further. They propose to return from the single district system for the election of members of the Senate, adopted in 1846, to the larger district system substantially in existence at that time, and which was then abrogated. Now, first, is this right? Second, if right is it expedient? I am constrained to say, that in my judgment, it is neither right nor expedient. First, as to the right. It is proposed by the committee to divide the State into eight senate districts, instead of thirty-two as at present existing, and organized, from which four Senators are to be chosen, as provided in the article submitted by them, except in the first district, which is accorded five. The effect of this system, if adopted, will be to remove the representative further from the electoral body than he is by the present mode of election. This, under our present system of representative government, is a grave objection. I regard it as essential to the proper working of our system that the relation between the representative and the constituent body shall be as close and intimate as possible. In order that this should be secured, small districts are absolutely indispensable. In large districts, such as are proposed by the committee, it is utterly impossible that any one Senator could be personally known by any considerable proportionate number of his constituents. Now, if to be ignorant of the character and qualifications of the representative is a benefit to the constituent, and if to be ignorant of the wants and desires of the larger portion of his constituents on the part of the representative be on the whole judicious and desirable under a popular government such as ours is, then this large district system recommended by the committee is the one we ought to adopt; but if, on the other hand, it is desirable and essential that the representative chosen to represent the people who are to vote for him, should be known to the electoral body whose interests he is elected to guard and promote, and also desirable that the agent or representative should know and be acquainted with the opinions, wants and necessities of those whom he is chosen to represent, then this large district system ought, in my judgment, to be rejected, unless, indeed, its advocates can point out benefits which are to flow from its adoption that will compensate for those that are sacrificed by a surrender of the existing system. To my mind they can point out no such advantages which can accrue either to representative or constituent from this proposed advance backward from small to large districts. It is urged by the learned chairman of the committee [Mr. Merritt], and by other gentlemen on this floor who advocate this change, if I understand them, that the change will make the office more honorable, and secure the election of a better class of men. Is this so? I confess I cannot see it. How will the candidates be selected, who are to make this "better class" of Senators? Manifestly by a convention of delegates from each county in the district. Now, it will under a large district system very often occur, that the most of the delegates themselves will not know all the men who will receive the nomination for Senators. They will have to take the candidate proposed on the recommendation of the delegates from that portion of the district from which he comes; and so, in turn, will the friends of that candidate take the other candidates in the same way, each locality recommending its own particular candidate, and taking the other upon the like recommendation from the other localities. Now what is there in this operation at all tending to secure a "better class" of Senators? Nothing at all. And when elected, how will it be? To whom is the Senator responsible? To just no one at all. His responsibility will be diffused over so large a territorial space as to be without appreciable weight resting upon him. Moreover, this was one of the very objections to the system which caused its rejection originally, and the adoption of the single district system in its stead. In the Convention of 1846, which adopted the single district system, the necessity of the change was very plainly stated by Mr. Wright, a delegate to that Convention from the county of Sullivan, and a member of the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature, and now one of the judges of the court of appeals. He is reported to have argued as follows on this question:

"What, said Mr. Wright, has created the desire with the people for single districts? Why have complaints been made in relation to the present arrangement? Because an important object is to be gained by bringing the Senator home to his constituents, by making him familiar with his constituency, and enabling him to acquire an accurate knowledge of their peculiar condition and wants. The county which he had the honor to represent was situated in the second senatorial district; the district was extensive in territory, and he doubted whether two of the Senators now representing her had ever set foot within the limits of Sullivan; and certain it is that those Senators were found last winter in these halls directly opposing by their votes her dearest interests."

Mr. R. Campbell, another member of that committee, is also reported as having sustained the single district system proposed by the committee in the Convention of 1846, as follows:

"He said that if any one fact should be prominent in this discussion relative to the duty of this Convention, it was the fact that complaints had so long been made of misrepresentation in the legislative bodies. He referred to the instructions given by the nominating conventions in relation to this subject as an indication of the popular will. The districts, as now organized, were a system of misrepresentation and not of representation. Some of them embraced a territory of some two hundred or three hundred miles, and it could not be supposed that one elector in one hundred could be acquainted with their senatorial candidate. Hence, the single senate district system had been adopted by the committee."

Mr. Crooker, a delegate from Cattaraugus in that Convention, is also reported to have said in regard to this large district system:

"The question under discussion was one most deeply interesting to the people of Cattaraugus. Their district, as gentlemen would perceive by looking at the map, embraced a single range of counties, commencing with Cheungo and ending with Cattaraugus. With an average breadth of about forty miles, the length was not far from two hundred and thirty. In shape it resembled a piece of ordinary shirting stretched to its utmost limit. The people of Cattaraugus had for a series of years been compelled to vote for Senators of whom they knew nothing. He ventured to assert that nineteenth-century men of the people of that county, in every three cases out of four, had never heard of their candidate for Senator until they found his nomination in the newspapers. Such, with all his advantages and knowledge of men in the district, had been his own condition. And for all practical purposes of representation, Cattaraugus might as well have been connected with Suffolk and the counties on Long Island. There was no communion of feeling between the people of Cattaraugus and Chenango. There was no union of interest between them except upon those great questions that affect and interest the State as a whole. The people of these counties on questions of a local character—often the most deeply felt—were antipodes of each other. If there was any one question upon which the people of that county were unanimous, it was in demanding the single district system. The expression of their opinion had on this subject been universal. They desired the privilege of knowing the candidates for the senatorial office. And they demanded it as a right of this Convention."

The above quotations are taken from the Argus edition of the Debates in the Convention of 1846, and are but specimens. They contain not only argument but evidence also as to the workings of the large district system when that "better class" of Senators were sent to the Senate. And to this indictment of that old and exploded system there was scarcely any denial in the Convention of 1846, and its truth and justice was affirmed by a vote of 79 against, to 31 in favor of it, which vote justly swept it out of existence. Its re-adoption now by this Convention, without any public demand to that effect, would be worse than a blunder—it would be a crime against representative government. If the system could not be made endurable by the giants of those days then occupying seats in the Senate, surely it cannot be made so now when the Senate is no longer a judicial body—the highest court in the State—and hence does not now attract to it, as it doubtless then did, the best legal talent in the State. I conclude, then, that it would not be right to adopt the large district system reported by the committee. It would be much more objectionable to adopt the system now, after the lapse of so long a period, and consequently large augmentation of population in the State than it was in 1846, and the reasons which were formerly argued with so much force and truth in favor of its abrogation are much more potent now against its re-adoption. Second. Is it expedient now to adopt the system proposed, even though it were admitted to be better than the single district system? I think not. There has been no call for such a change on the part of the people—none at all. And for this Convention to undertake to load down this Constitution which is to be framed here with so radical a change, and one so entirely uncalled for by the people, and which will surely encounter more or less hostility from the various localities which may be unfavorably affected, is, in my opinion, wholly inexpedient, and I shall, therefore, favor the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], so far as single districts are concerned, in the hope that we may adhere to the present Constitution so far as it met the public expectation, and amend it only in those respects called for by the people and demanded by the best interests of the State.

Mr. LUDINGTON.—Mr. Chairman, the unanimous report of a committee, composed of intelligent, high-minded gentlemen, of both political parties and located in different sections of the State, entitles it at least to high respect and calm consideration. The subject is important as affecting the most fundamental interest of State government, the organization of the Legislature—the sole law-making power of the people, through and by their consent. On its constitution and virtue depend chiefly the hopes of the people for protection of life, liberty and property. Guided by no other consideration than the attainment of the best mode of subserving these ends, I, after the most impartial investigation of the subject have determined to give the plan—if no better one of a similar character shall be submitted—my support. Aside from local interests and selfish schemes, which true patriotism and enlightened statesmanship should disregard, when they conflict with the interests of the whole people, I believe that the organization of the State into large senate and assembly districts, will better attain the ends in view. If the plan proposed were an experiment, we might enter upon it with some hesitation. We might, however, be the more willing to make the trial, since under our present system, whether for real or imaginary causes I will not now say, our people have year by year been losing confidence in the wisdom and purity of our legislators, until they do not hesitate to say that they are composed in great part of men who have far less regard for the public, than private interests. And hence some change that might mitigate or wholly remove the evils complained of, would be hailed by the people as a harbinger of legislative reform. But fortunately the plan proposed by the committee is neither a theoretical vagary, or an untried experiment. The system of large senate and assembly districts, and aggregated constituencies is not new, but the oldest and most approved in the history of the State. It was adopted by the Convention of 1777, which laid broad and deep the foundations of our State government, and whose wisdom, as evinced in its framework, has been imparted to and canonized in the hearts of the people. We still retain the form which they gave us. They divided the State into four senate districts, with six Senators from each, to hold their offices for four years, and to be so classified that one should retire and one be elected every year. And thus they remained until 1801, when the second State Convention was held, and the number of Senators increased to thirty-two, and members of Assembly from seventy to one hundred. During this long period, when those political jealousies which gave rise to the revolution, were in their freshest activity, when the people for the first time began to participate in self government, and were most liable to make excessive demands, respecting immediate representation, this system of centralized political representation, as its present enemies call it, worked well and satisfactorily. During this eventful, and most interesting period of our history no sickening clamor about legislative corruption deafened the ear, nor were their morning and evening's pastime employed in reading revelations of official corruptions, and frauds upon the people's treasury; where dishonesty was found, it was the exception, and not the rule. When again in 1821, a Convention assembled for the first time in this capitol for the purpose of revising or amending the organic law, and the pure and eminent men who composed it were like ourselves anxiously looking for reforms to meet the changed condition of the people, and their increasing diversity of wants and interests—both political and material—they were found willing to combine in the new form of government, such elements of the old as experience had approved, with such new ones as their wisdom suggested. We find them eliminating from the old Constitution and transferring to the new one, among other forms and principles, that same cherished system of large senate and assembly districts, which had met the sanction of the two preceding Conventions and the approval of the people for the preceding forty-four years. No objection was yet heard that the people were not properly represented from being removed too far from their representatives. No eloquent appeals broke on the ear of the delegates in that Convention that if these large districts were not broken up and the represented and representative brought nearer together, that unless local interests had local representatives in both branches of the Legislature it would become corrupt, the fountains of justice fail, and the people's liberties depart forever. Sir, such appeals and argumentation were left for a later period in our history. Once more they entered upon the same system of large senate and assembly districts; twenty-three new counties, having been added to the State since 1801, with a large increase of population, the number of senate districts was increased from four to eight, retaining the same number of Senators, with an increase of Assembly districts and members to 128. From that time down to 1846, a period of twenty five years, that period in which the slumbering energies of the State woke up, when it took its greatest stride in material progress, and political development, in which the immortal Clinton, rising to the grandeur of the necessity, conceived and matured the nation's proudest work by which inter-oceanic communication was opened with the boundless agricultural and mineral wealth of the great north-west, which has ever since been pouring in upon us with boundless munificence and diffusing its blessings over the whole continent; and during which all the canals of the State were legislated into existence and maintained without acknowledged fraud or material loss to the State. Within this decade the shrill whistle of the locomotive first broke the stillness of our forests, the magnetic telegraph spoke its lightning voice, and our population increased over 1,200,000. It may truly be said to have been the Augustine age, so to speak, of the State, and the Republic. If during this time any evils crept into our State government, it will, I apprehend, put the advocates of single districts to their wits, to show that it was owing to large senate and assembly districts. Thus for seventy years, this system of legislative organization was found doing its work of progress and development. What sections of the State were neglected, what local interests suffered, and where was the citizen who did not feel that he was duly represented in the government? It bore the wisdom of the fathers, attested by the accumulated experience of the people for nearly three quarters of a century. But in the Convention of 1846 the word change first rang out in this chamber. No middle ground was taken, the work of the fathers was repudiated by the new authors of government. The wisdom of the Jays, the Kents, the Clintons, the Livingstons, the Spencers and Van Vechtens had departed. New men and newer theories broke upon the scene. Old lines were broken up, counties were divided and subdivided, political associations destroyed and local unities obliterated to meet the demands of the reformers of 1846. They organized thirty-two senate, and one hundred and twenty-eight assembly districts—Senators to hold office for two years, and members of Assembly one. Thus we find that more exalted and dignified branch of the Legislature, intended for more deliberative action, and as a check upon the unwise and precipitate action of the lower house, has, by its affinity with the Assembly in constituency and tenure, lost that character, and for the mere ends of legislation might with safety, be either abolished or merged in the Assembly. The only check left to the people, upon unwise and unwholesome legislation, is found in the purity and firmness of the executive veto—a power rarely exercised by the early governors. We sit to-day in the council chamber of the people of this great commonwealth to view under the light of history these two systems—the one tested by the experience of seventy and the other of twenty years. Sir, I do not hesitate to declare from the lights before me, that the practical working of the earlier system, came nearer the true ideal of government, by giving to the people greater security against imposition and fraud, while it met all the reasonable demands, and just requirements of the people. Had it not been for the separation of judicial functions from the legislative, found blended in the same officer under the former system, I doubt if the framers of the Constitution of 1846 would have given us the present system of small districts. As a distinctive measure it was not demanded by the people. If it was adopted then, for the reasons urged by honorable gentleman on this floor, for its retention, now, then I submit that they were guilty of the gravest inconsistencies by giving us a judicial system organized upon the same basis of representative consolidation and political integration. My honorable friend from Chenango [Mr. Prindle], with an air of confidence, asked, "Who is demanding the change as proposed." My answer is, the same constituency that is demanding many other changes which we propose to make in the primary law. Those provisions for the Constitution which we have been memorialized to make have been rejected. Sir, the further the Senator is removed from the control of cliques and sectional influences the freer and purer will his duties be discharged. If the district is large, men will be the more likely to be chosen from their known virtues, business capacities and talents. If such qualities do not win success, none others should. If men of such character in one section of a district do not find rivals of equal merit in another, or if they do, the district and State cannot in either event fail in having a worthy and safe representative. This, sir, in my judgment is true patriotism and sound statesmanship. Had I any ambition for future senatorial honors, I am fully sensible, that the plan I support, if adopted, would blast all such hopes. Sir, I came not here to dig pit-falls for enemies or to engage in the no less unworthy business of building gilded pathways for myself or friends to places of honor and trust. I am under no instructions, except those of conscience and duty, and those I mean to fulfill. Have the opponents of the system proposed, shown any evils that have arisen or will necessarily arise under it, either of inconvenience in its operations or danger to the public weal? There has much been said in this regard respecting the wants of the people, a very popular, though oftentimes groundless theory. On this point I have only to say that I have the honor of representing in part a constituency which, for intelligence, virtue, public spirit and enterprise, has no superior in this State; and not one voice, except that of my honorable colleague from Orange [Mr. Fullerton], has been raised nor one line written against the report of the committee, while the Daily Journal of the city of Newburgh indorses it. The people of my district know that they are the constituencies of both branches of the Legislature. They care not how radical the lower house may be so long as they have an experienced and conservative Senate, with a continuing existence to supervise their proceedings, and which experience has shown we do not have under the present arrangement. The people are honest, and they demand honesty in their public servants. If the legislative department is pure it will be the purifier of all in subordination to it. If under the present system we have some pure and capable representatives, as it is conceded we do have, under the proposed plan we could not have less, with all the chances in favor of more. By enlarging the senate and assembly districts, extending the tenure of office and increasing the compensation, as proposed by the committee, you will improve the morale of the Legislature, restore confidence between people and representative, and promote the general good. The people sir, are looking with hope to the action of this Convention on this report, and on that action they believe depends the future character of the legislation of this great State, the perpetuating of good government and the welfare of the whole people. Sir, I at present see no other practical way of their attainment than that proposed by the committee, and I shall, therefore, if alone among my honorable colleagues, give it an honest support, regardless of all local or political expediency, and rely upon a generous future for my vindication.

Mr. KRUM—In rising to discuss the question which is more immediately before this committee, I deem it unnecessary to offer any apology to the honorable gentlemen who constituted the committee that made this report. I do not believe, sir, that it becomes necessary to put in a defense for them, to put in a plea for honesty on their account, simply because we may differ from their action. I, some time since, introduced a resolution looking to the representation of minorities with reference to the Assembly. I believe yet in the doctrine of the representation of minorities in localities, and when that question is properly before this committee, I may have some suggestions I desire to offer upon that question. But the question of single districts or large districts, the question immediately before this committee, is what I desire to speak about now. When I look back in the history of our country—the history of the several Constitutions of the State of New York, that have gone before us, I draw conclusions different from the gentleman who has last addressed this committee [Mr. Ludington]. I look back to the Constitution of 1777, and find that then there were four senate districts—large districts—electing twenty-four Senators. I find that the Constitution of 1777 provided for that method of electing Senators, and that it continued until 1821. I find that in 1821 the Convention that then assembled also continued the large district system increasing the Senators to thirty-two. For the period of seventy years nearly, this State had had the experience of large senate districts sending their Senators to the Legislature. In 1846 a Constitutional Convention again assembled, and that Constitutional Convention took a different action upon this question from the Conventions that had preceded it, and the natural inquiry is, why? The large district system, existed for seventy years. Why then did a Convention of the people in 1846 remodel and change it to what it is now? Let us look back for a moment into the history of the Constitution of 1846, and see if we can ascertain the reason. The gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] has given you a few of the reasons then stated. Others are to be found in other speeches of the men who composed that Convention. The Hon. Mr. Rhoades alluded to the unanimous call that had come up from the people for an amendment of the Constitution in this particular of single districts. Hon. Mr. Stebbins said: "The people demand the formation of single districts." Hon. Wm. B. Wright said: "The popular will has been unequivocally expressed in favor of single districts."

Hon. R. Campbell, Jr., said: "If any one fact was prominent in the discussions of the people which preceded this Convention it was the complaint of misrepresentation under the present system of electing Senators, and whoever would take the trouble of looking into the proceedings of conventions nominating candidates for a seat in this House would find that in nearly all of such conventions a resolution was passed in favor of single districts." The Hon. Mr. Patterson said that: "When he came to this Convention he had supposed if there was a single question which had been fully decided upon by the people of this State, it was that of single districts for Senators. He had never seen any other view advocated in any newspaper throughout the State, neither had he heard any man oppose the plan." Looking through the debates of the Constitutional Convention of 1846, you will scarcely find a man who was bold enough to deny this representation by single district. The unanimous call of the people had gone forth; the unanimous expression went out to the Convention of 1846; and with the experience of three-fourths of a century, they yielded to the demand of the people, and the Constitution was adopted as it now is. Is it then wise for us now, in this Convention assembled, to change that plan? Change did I say? No, a return simply to the plan that the people so unanimously rejected, and to whose wishes the Convention of 1846 so wisely yielded. I find, sir, in the history of the past and in the present, what is the wish of the people, and that wish induces me to cast my vote on the question in such a manner as not to reverse the well known will of the people upon this subject. Mr. Chairman, we are sent here to represent the people, not to make such a Constitution as we may desire, unless our desires really be in accordance with the wishes of the people who sent us. We are mere agents and mere representatives, and they are our superiors, and to their wisdom, when we find it so unequivocally and explicitly expressed, it is our duty as their agents in submission to bow. Another reason, sir, why I am opposed to the large district system, is this: that you bring the question of representation home to the people; you permit the people, knowing their man, to cast their votes for the man whom they know. They are not voting for strangers; they are not voting for a man who has acquired a little public notoriety and a little public reputation, simply because he fills some public office. And I am surprised to see learned and intelligent men upon this floor take the position in favor of large districts, for the reason that none but public men should occupy the position of Senator of the State of New York—none but men who have been before the people. Will any gentleman upon this floor arise in his seat and boldly assert that in many a county and town, in many a little village and hamlet, in many a valley and upon many a hill side, there lives not a man who has never been before the people, but who, by reason of his education and by reason of his natural ability, and by reason of his honesty of heart, and integrity of purpose, is fitted to represent the State of New York in the high, responsible and respectable position of Senator. Confine it to public men and how soon would the Senate run out? Confine it to public men and how long before there would not be a public man occupying such a position? If it is to be confined to public men then, when all the public men die, you can have no Senator. Place your constituency in a position where they may be brought before the public, where the men who know them may send their best men. Make public men of those whom the people do not know now. That is the way to elevate the standard and position of the Senate, and not by putting men there who have a little public notoriety, by reason of having held some public position. Mr. Chairman, there is another reason why I am in favor of small districts. The small district system has the tendency of drawing out the votes at the elections, not the republican vote, not the democratic vote, but the vote of the entire State. When your candidates are in nomination, when your tickets are in the field, what draws out the vote? Why, sir, it is your local candidates. It is they who induce men to come to the polls and deposit their ballot, unless, perhaps, in some great national contest, when you vote for President or rather for electors for President, or in a State contest, when the ticket is headed by the Governor. But aside from the Governor, State officers are generally unknown to the people of the State, and I deem it best, sir, that every man who is entitled to the elective franchise, should, in his own sound and proper judgment, go to the polls and exercise that right. Now, Mr. Chairman, various other arguments have been made by those who take the other side of this question. They are made more particularly in reference to the four-years' plan. They say give us a Senate of four years, and then we will have the benefit of experience. What experience, sir? Is it necessary that there should be experience in legislation in order to make an honest and upright and good legislator? I am not going to assert that there is not something in experience; but I do state this, that the question of experience like every other question, has its two sides. Experience in the line of honesty and in the forward march of integrity is an experience which is well for all of us to have; but, sir, there is a kind of experience, not in the legislative hall only, but everywhere, that leads to something besides that. There is an experience that tends to corruption; there is an experience that points out the way to vice; that makes the tracks therein and then that tells how to cover up those tracks. Experience, then, may or may not be a necessary requisite to a good legislator. Another idea advanced is that large districts will have a tendency to do away with the formation of "rings" and cliques which control nominations. They say that in the small district system, nominating caucuses get together and nominate men and make a mere clique or ring in the nomination of Senators. I hardly know what gentlemen mean by "cliques" or "rings." If they mean cliques and rings of men in every county, in every town, in every senate district, who have sufficient regard for the politics of the day to honestly and earnestly strive to promote the pri-ciples they indorse, and the party carrying out such principles, then it is a clique or ring that one may well feel proud to be in. But if they mean that kind of cliques or rings formed by designing men for selfish purposes, to control nominations or corrupt conventions or men, then I ask if the larger the circle the larger is not the clique and the ring, and the more powerful its influence. In conclusion I would caution the Convention against such action as is known to be opposed to the decided and expressed desire of the people.

Mr. GRAVES—Mr. Chairman, I have listened with undivided attention to the debate upon this report for three reasons: first, to learn from the committee why they offered to this Convention a change in a system which had so effectually been carried out with the approval of the people; second, to satisfy my own mind that the arguments which were offered by the committee and the advocates of the measure were such as would allow this innovation upon an established and well understood principle; third, that the arguments were such as would satisfy the people to whom this proposed change was a surprise—that it was in truth a reform as well as a change. This committee have no doubt given the subject a candid examination, and have come to this conclusion from such observations as they have been able to make since they have had the matter in charge. But it must be apparent to all that the subject of this report, unlike many others, is as familiar to all the members of this Convention as it is to the committee; for it rests upon judgment and not from any facts which the committee have been gleaning from hidden and concealed intelligence. The good sense of this committee need not be doubted; but its members are only the twenty-second part of the aggregate judgment of this Convention and cannot justly claim any advantage over the opinion of other members of the Convention. In a body as large as this, composed of delegates from different parts of the State, unacquainted with each other's opinions, it is not surprising that they should entertain a diversity of opinion upon subjects so vital to public interest, and many times and on many occasions differ with the committees of their own selection. Indeed we have come here to differ, compare and agree. It is said that the object of this contemplated change is to secure men of more talent and greater moral worth in the Senate; and to enable the people to act more wisely in their selection. It is also said that Senators are incompetent and unworthy of their trust under the present system. I am not prepared to admit that the people send unworthy men. The people select those who are regarded worthy and well qualified for these positions, and because they are corrupted when they come in contact with wicked and designing men in this atmosphere, and in their new relation of life, does it follow that there is any want of sagacity or ability in the people to judge wisely and choose discreetly, or that the system through or under which they are chosen is defective? But it is said that under this well established system we fail to get men of the highest capacity. Is it not easy, sir, to see that the general diffusion of knowledge has removed the barrier between great and small, and created an equality which levels the intellectual powers, and removes that disparity among men which characterized the incumbents of official stations at an earlier period in our nation's history? I am not prepared to admit that the Senate of this State has been inferior in intellect since 1846, to the Senate between 1846 and 1821; and I am not prepared to admit that our Senate to-day is not, in point of intellect and integrity, on an equality with any Senate which has honored this State at a period in its history when it was said, we had giant minds. The advance and change in our government created a desire to increase in wealth by such devices and schemes as seem well calculated to corrupt the good, and poison the element in which republican institutions have so long prospered. Amid this general onslaught upon virtue, it is not surprising that some should have fallen, and perhaps we ought to rejoice that so few have fallen. Again, sir, how will this change of district add any protection against these devices? You have not, by changing the district, changed the men nor added to their capacity or integrity. They are the same in character and ability and in number, and only taken out of the small districts and put into large ones—removed from the great body of those who should judge of their qualifications and fitness for these positions. Why ask to make this change? Have the people demanded it? The press has been silent, neither political party has breathed an intimation that has called for this report. Will this Convention assume to override the will of the people who have, by their silence, spoken their approval of this system as it now stands? Is it the object of this Convention to spend its time and deliberations upon subjects which have grown up in committee rooms rather than among the sovereigns of this land who will be prepared to rebuke our fruitful imagination with a veto power before that political tribunal from which we cannot appeal? The wishes of the people have been expressed through the public prints, and we see their desires written out; and we need not misjudge how and upon what the people desire us to act. The public judgment has expressed its opinion upon the elective franchise, and they knew that this Convention would differ upon that subject; but they confided in the wisdom and integrity of their servants who compose this body, that they would differ only as that difference would lead to careful examination and a nearer approximation to what the interests of the State demanded. They have long heard and known that the Erie canal has been the shibboleth before whom great and good men have fallen, and around which clustered the principal and the servant, the open and concealed partner, the official and his clerks, all plucking the fruit which seemed to be so palatable to many who have been surfeited by its quantity and richness, and in a voice which we must heed they have demanded of us that this great State power should not be prostituted to the venal purposes of making bankrupt the very authors of its existence. And this State capital, with its capacity for great State revenue should, by the united wisdom of this Convention, be placed where the honored father of our worthy associate in this Convention [Mr. Clinton] intended it should be, in the hands of an efficient and honest power, through whose fidelity the State should be honored and her treasury enriched. The country demands that this Convention should ignore all questions having their origin in marked effort, and look with careful thought and cautious deliberation to the natural weight that bears its sinking burden upon the industrial interests and moneyed investments of our people, and, so far as within the power of this Convention, guard with a strong hand the interest of our people from that national crisis and monied Shylock, whose unwelcome power seems slowly approaching. They ask relief from the draining taxation that we have been compelled to submit to, in order to maintain our honor and our national existence. These, with them, have no party politics, no political wire-pullings, but come to the pockets unfilled, though the hands are at work and the capital is yielding its ordinary revenue. This demands the exercise of the condensed judgment of this Convention, and no time should be lost by us in making the examination. This financial question is the people's question, and they watch this Convention as though the responsibility of our State depended upon its labors. The mal and delayed administration of the law has awakened the interest of the litigant as well as the tax payer, and forced upon this body the absolute necessity of re-organizing the courts that justice may be more readily obtained and more easily recognized. This is a work, like the preceding, requiring more time and talent than can wisely be exercised in the weeks allotted to this Convention. And that class who are to be more immediately affected by it, as well as the community in general, however remotely, will have good cause to complain if our best efforts are not put forth to reform this manifest judicial evil, and no time can wisely be diverted from its due consideration. Our cities are to-day groaning under the severities of partial and forced legislation, which makes our local municipal regulations almost an unlimited monarchy; and the evils are so prominent that the millionaire as well as the day laborer is claiming at the hands of this Convention an organic law which shall guard capital, protect labor, suppress crime, and shield innocence and virtue. This is hardly secondary to any reform demanded from this Convention, and anything short of a full consideration of this question will do unmeasured injury to this mighty class who have, in deep earnestness, asked that they shall be governed by uniform laws, and that legislation shall be forbidden which has crippled the enterprise and fed the unweaned appetites of that class who have always made public good subservient to private interest. There are many other and important claims upon the judgment, ability, integrity and industry of this Convention which the people have partially discussed, and which they have sent us here to more fully examine and act upon. I submit, sir, whether we would not more fully meet public expectations and our own convictions of duty if we confine our deliberations to reforms demanded than to attempt changes where no apparent evil exists, and by which arouse a feeling of dissatisfaction, which is already being awakened in the rural districts, which I fear will add to the uncertainty of recognizing the work of this Convention as worthy of their approval. Cicero said, at an early period of the world's history, that it was easier to pull down than to build up—to destroy than to create. Our small or single district system has met our wants and secured to all their rights, and from which no evil has arisen. I most earnestly protest in behalf of the twenty senatorial districts that the change should not be made as contemplated by this report.

Mr. ANDREWS—I have listened with great attention to the different views of gentlemen as to the propriety of adopting the one system or the other in respect to senate districts. And I agree fully with the gentleman from New York [Mr. Evarts] and other gentlemen who have stated that there can scarcely be a more important question for the consideration of this Convention than that relating to the organization of the Legislature of the State. In this body is deposited the whole legislative power of the people, restrained, it is true, in some respects by the organic law, but these restrictions are from necessity general in their character, while there is left to the Legislature the exercise of a mass of indefinite and discretionary powers affecting public and private interests. And, sir, it is for this reason that considerations bearing upon the organization of this body are and must be extremely important. The Legislature is the strong arm of the government. The Legislature may remove the Executive; and it may drive from his seat the judge who has degraded or disgraced his high office. The interests of the people are involved in the action of legislative bodies, and from the result of that action there can be no appeal. And, sir, it seems to me that the whole question as to large or single senate districts, depends upon the consideration whether by the one system or the other better representatives can be secured and thereby better and safer legislation. Sir, I differ from the gentlemen who have spoken upon this question in favor of the single senate district system in the statement that the demand for single districts was made by the people of the State, and that it was in obedience to public sentiment that the Convention of 1846 adopted the innovation which was then made upon the pre-existing system. Why, sir, as I understand it, the Convention of 1846 in their action proceeded upon the theory that, as it was an admitted axiom in American politics that the people were the source of political power, the true idea of government, founded upon that axiom, required that it should be arranged in all its departments so as to give to the people the most direct participation in its administration. It was, sir, the reaction in that Convention against the principle of centralization which had pervaded the earlier Constitutions of the State. The dominant idea of the Convention of 1846 was decentralization; and as the result of that idea the Executive was stripped of many powers which had formerly been vested in that officer. Judicial and administrative officers were made elective by the people, and the direct intervention of the people in public affairs was secured by frequently recurring elections, and, as I believe and understand it, this plan of single assembly and senate districts which was then adopted, was a part of that general system as to the distribution of power which—under the idea I have adverted to—permeated the action of that Convention. It was claimed that the nearer you could bring the representative to the people, the more direct and immediate the relation between the representative and the constituency, the smaller the constituency, and the more limited the district from which a Senator was to be chosen, the higher would be the sense of responsibility in the representative, and the more certain that there would be honest and intelligent legislation. And, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask this Convention whether the practical working of the single district system during the last twenty years has justified the claims upon which the experiment was urged? Has the character of the legislative bodies of the State been elevated above the character of the Legislature under the previous Constitution? Has honest and intelligent legislation been secured? And, sir, the best illustration of this experiment is to be found in the Assembly where the districts are the smallest practicable, and where from almost every neighborhood there is a representative in the popular branch of the Legislature. I think, sir, I hazard nothing in saying to this Convention that that body in this State has forfeited public confidence and respect. If public rumor is to be credited, corruption has stalked unabashed and almost undisguised through our legislative halls. The memory of the past Legislatures in this State is odious with the people. The most direct responsibility to the people has not prevented this corruption in our public bodies, nor has the sense of honor or decency restrained them in respect to matters of legislation. It is true, sir, that owing to the limited number of the Senate, owing to the higher dignity of the position, owing to the larger districts, and constituencies which Senators have represented, the Senate has not shared entirely in this condemnation. There have been, to my knowledge and within my acquaintance, many able and upright men returned as members of the Senate during the last twenty years; but I think that public confidence has been greatly weakened in respect also to this branch of our Legislature. Now, sir, I am opposed to the single senate district system on the ground that that system requires either the annual or biennial election of the whole body of the Senate, or such an arrangement of details that only the voice of a portion of the electors of the State can be heard at each election in the choice of Senators. I believe it is a solid objection to the single senate district, that with it either the one or the other of these views must be adopted. I am also opposed, Mr. Chairman, to the single district system, because I believe that there should be a sharp and decided contrast between the organization of the two branches of the Legislature; that in no other way can the principle upon which legislative bodies in free countries are divided into two branches have fairly its representation and appropriate application. I do not agree with the gentlemen who have spoken upon this floor, that it is desirable to bring the Senator as near as possible to the constituency whom he represents, in the sense in which this statement is made: In my judgment that is one of the dangers to be avoided, and I believe that our legislation has mainly suffered from the tendency to local and special legislation, induced by the very fact of substantial identity of local interest and feeling in both branches of the Legislature, between the several representatives and the constituency whom they represent. It is, sir, because Senators coming from a limited district, with a limited constituency, owing as they do their nomination and designation to a few prominent men in each locality—that when here they are under a kind of moral coercion to legislate in respect to local and individual interests, for the purpose of pleasing the constituency whom they represent, in disregard of the more important interests of the State. Special legislation to accommodate local interests, is one of the great faults in legislative bodies, and the dependence of a Senator upon a limited constituency is the great stimulus to such legislation. Sir, I do not fear another thing; I do not fear, sir, that by the substitution of the large district system there will occur a concentration of the political power of the State in the hands of a few men at the capital—a spectre which disturbs the minds of some gentlemen. For myself, I neither advocate nor am I in favor of so arranging the government of the State as to enable a few men to be the governing power of the State. I do not share, sir, in the apprehensions of many gentlemen upon this floor, that under the large district system there will be a regency in this State, wielding the power of the government. I was not a supporter, nor am I an advocate, of the system which, for years in this State, under the name of the Albany regency, controlled its political power. The Albany regency, sir, was an absolute despotism, and local politicians, in various portions of the State, were restive under its dominant and all pervading power. But, sir, when I come to look at the history of the period when it controlled the party organization in the State, I cannot fail to see that in the foreground in that power in the State stood men of high capacity and ability; men in whom great public and private virtues were recognized, and that, although they ruled as with a rod of iron the political organization of the State, nevertheless they had that high sense of honor, and that controlling sense of public duty which led them sedulously to guard the interests of the people, and to exact as a condition of promotion in the public service, fidelity to public interests. For my part, if we are to be ruled by politicians, I prefer such a rule; I prefer the domination of such men to that of the small politicians in the small districts of this State, who by intrigue, acquiring control of the political machinery through that, are able to designate and determine the persons who are to represent the people in the Legislature. I had rather be under the rule of politicians of a larger mold, than of that swarm of vampires who now, year by year, gather around the Legislature from each petty district of the State to fatten upon the public treasury, and to demand special legislation as the reward of special services. I am in favor of the larger district system, because I believe that under it we shall get men of higher character to represent us in the upper house of the Legislature. I, sir, would make that a position which should be sought and desired by men who had a nobler and proper ambition to serve the State for the interest of the State. I would, so far as I am able, shut out from that house men who have merely local influence and local reputation, and would excite that emulation which would be felt in the various portions of a large district to send the best and strongest representation which they were able to the upper house. These are the views I entertain upon this subject. I would not lift Senators above, or make them independent of, the people of the State, but I would lift them above that popular clamor which compels them at times to consult the feelings of the local constituency at the expense of public interests. I would constitute the Senate, so that Senators should in truth and in fact be Senators of the State.

Mr. HARRIS — Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this discussion with some surprise and a little regret; because I have discovered there is a large number of delegates who still retain a favorable regard for the single district system, and surprise and regret from the apprehension that the vote of the Convention may indorse that system. I had supposed that the popular sentiment was almost unanimously in favor of large districts. I have not heard a person, I believe, within the last five years, speak in favor of retaining the single district system. Until this discussion commenced I had supposed it almost a matter of course that we were to change the mode of electing Senators. A good deal has been said to-day in reference to the action of the Convention of 1846. In that Convention, sir, I voted in favor of a single district system. Not only that, but, in my humble way, I advocated it. But I regard it as a failure, and I do not feel that we are making no progress when we return to a good principle that we have left. I am willing to go back to the system that obtained before 1846. I regard the single district system as having been adopted then rather upon political considerations than upon the ground of enlarged statesmanship. Sir, you are aware—all the members of this Convention are aware—of the peculiar circumstances, politically, under which that Convention was assembled. It was controlled by the radical portion of the democratic party who had become restive under the domination of what was commonly called the "Albany regency." They were determined to throw off the yoke—to get rid of the power of that regency. That object and purpose controlled the action of the Convention. The watchword and key-note was: "Remove power from the center, send it to the extremities; strip the Governor and the Senate of all power; let the people elect all officers." This was the purpose of that Convention; and this explains the action of that body in adopting this single district system. In my humble judgment, from the best observation I have given to the workings of that system, it was a great mistake; and I believe we would do well to return to the large district system.

And for this reason—that Senators are to be charged with the destinies and the interests of the State, more, perhaps, than almost any other officers. We need men of enlarged views, enlarged experience, and we are not so likely to get them under the single district system as the large. In my judgment the great excellence of the system reported by this committee is the fact that while Senators hold their term of office for the period of four years; at the same time the electors throw into the body of the Senate new Senators every year. I am, therefore, in favor of the report of the committee. If we do nothing here to improve the character of the Legislature, we shall fail to satisfy the expectations of our constituents. If there is any portion of the government that needs reform, I think all will agree that it is the Legislature. Yet it is proposed now to continue the senatorial system as it has existed for the last twenty years—to make no change. I think it would be a very great mistake if we should not do something for the purpose of satisfying the expectations of the people in reference to the mode of electing Senators; and I can conceive of no mode better than that reported by the committee. We all know that there is great complaint of the legislation of the State. We have been told that some 2,000 pages of statute laws were enacted by the last Legislature in one hundred days. I regard it as one of the great evils of our day. There never was a people so severely legislated as the American people. There never was a people that could endure so much legislation as ours are obliged to endure. It requires that we should adopt the wisest measures we can for the purpose of improving the character of our legislation, and it seems to me going back to the old system of electing Senators is really making progress in the right direction.

Mr. FOLGER — I was sorry that the hammer fell on the speech of the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Evans] just as he had reached what, to my mind, was about to be the most interesting part of it, that where he had begun to develop his theory for securing the independence of the Senate of this State. In my view, in this discussion, that part of the idea which should govern us has been too much neglected. The single district plan has been advocated upon the ground of bringing the Senator home to the people, and making him feel almost irresistibly the power of his constituency upon him. I believe that the true idea is not complete unless it is also provided that there shall be independence of the Senate or in its action. That is what should also be held up to this Convention. What is the theory upon which we have a Senate? What is the theory of all free government in making two branches of a Legislature? What is the theory which pervades every measure proposed by any gentleman upon any side of this subject? It is that the Senate should be a different body from the Assembly in its constituents, its mode of office, and the tenure of office. Why should they be different? If the all-pervading idea is to be that the Senator should feel the force of his constituency almost always pressing upon him, and feel that he is circumscribed by it, and must meet his accountability at very short periods, and to a limited constituency, why should there be any different tenure of office or any other difference in the constitution of the Senate? Why should not a Senate be elected by small districts no more numerous than the Assembly, and with as short a period of service? But it is admitted that there must be a difference. But why? We must base it on some ground. It is this, that there should be one body engaged in the legislation of this State which should feel independent in its conduct. Gentlemen acknowledge that theory. They propose to set it up and establish it. Will they stop short of putting it on a proper pedestal? After they have bowed down and worshipped it, and acknowledged it as the true theory, will they, in their practical action, destroy the idol at once? How are you going to reach and secure this independence? You must prolong their term of office; you must elect them by a different manner, and scatter their constituency over a larger district. I wish modestly to allude to the experience I have derived elsewhere than here upon this very subject. It was principally for that I rose, that I might add to sufficient reasoning of others my testimony as to the practical workings of the present system. In the beginning of the session of every Legislature we hear whispered abroad through these halls that certain schemes are to be presented here. Well, men say of this or that project, or that scheme cannot succeed; it is too preposterous; it disgusts the common sense of every one here that such a draft as that should be made on the treasury, or such an infringement upon the rights of the people. Men say "that cannot succeed." But along about the month of February it begins to be seen that an influence has been abroad on subtle or atmospheric force, and it is found that in counting votes there are more for it than you a month before would have supposed possible. About the month of March it has gone further, and it is pretty certain it will have a majority. Well, now, why? I do not admit that any man has been bought for that scheme, but I do declare that the interests of himself and his constituents have made him engage in log-rolling to carry some pet measure by giving his influence and his vote to that scheme. How is that? I come from a single senate district, and come the sole representative of that district. That district has a local measure which it is incumbent upon me, or I think that it is, to advance and secure or go home disgraced and fail of a re-election. Now, how am I to secure it. On its own merits and with only the support it can attract in and of itself—that measure cannot succeed. I must combine then with the supporters of other measures. And there it grows. I use now the first person of the pronoun that I may not reflect upon others, though I disclaim having acted thus. I look about me, and see on the files of the Senate this bill, and that bill, and that bill. I find who are the introducers or supporters of them. I associate myself with them, conspire with them if you choose to use that word, because I do not want to lose my constituents' project, and cannot carry it without extrinsic aid, and can only get help by giving aid for aid. I find there is the Central railroad fare bill, the Susquehanna railroad bill, the Whitehall and Plattsburgh railroad bill, the Chenango extension bill, the bill for the exemption from taxation of railroad bonds and others of that class, hundreds of them which my recollection fails now to call to mind. Now, this little matter of mine up in the twenty-sixth senate district can go if they can go, and it cannot go if they cannot go. We must combine votes. Now, see the result. Without money and without price, except the oppressive and compelling idea that I cannot go home to my constituents without that little measure is carried, I am induced to vote for these other things in reward for the favor which comes from the supporters of them to my measure. I could specify instance upon instance where I have seen this effect. But suppose I have, as gentlemen have, colleagues in this Convention, three other Senators with me in my senate district, I divide the responsibility with them. I go home and say I consulted and acted with Mr. So and So and Mr. So and So, who are also your representatives, and we found that although the measure was a fair one and ought to be passed and that we had presented it as well as we could, still we had not strength enough to do it, that the pressure from greater and more general considerations was too powerful. Other gentlemen did not see it in the same light we did, and they were the majority. Thus I divide the responsibility. I say that I am not alone to blame. But suppose I am the sole representative, my constituents say to me on my return home, the Senator from such a district got such a railroad bill or other bill carried, why could not you carry one bill appropriating $25,000 for the repair of the Crooked Lake canal or whatever it may be. The fear of reproach is almost irresistible to the representative while human nature is constituted as it is now, with its ambitions, and its desire for approval and commendation. Now, here is just where an improvement is desired, or at least needed. We want to enlarge the senate districts for the reason that we want to increase the feeling of independence on the part of the Senator; for the reason that we want the Senator not to feel himself at the mercy or caprice of any particular small section of country; to increase the number of representatives so that the responsibility shall be divided and the representative may go home and say, I did my duty as well as others did theirs. We all did our duty, but failed of success. There is a great deal of talk about legislative corruption. It is not for me to affirm or deny it. It is not new. I wish I had here the debates of the Convention of 1821, and I would show you running all through them, from page to page, complaints and denunciations of legislative corruption almost in the very verbiage that has been used in this Convention. "Legislative corruption" was then the cry, as it is now the cry. It may have been just and well founded then. I shall not admit or deny but that it is well founded now. There has been no remedy found for it if it does exist, for one reason—because we have been going in the wrong direction. Instead of increasing the independence of the representative, we have been all the while increasing his dependence upon his constituency—a small circum-scribed constituency—making him feel that he represents a hamlet instead of a State. The gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris] has alluded to the ponderous volume of laws that is shortly to come out. It will be a ponderous volume. But what is it? It is in the greater part legislation for localities; it is of laws passed for localities under this very pressure of which I speak.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—Without any desire to interrupt the gentleman [Mr. Folger] I would ask him if this local legislation will not be prevented by giving greater power to the boards of supervisors?

Mr. FOLGER—You cannot cut off legislation for localities. You cannot, beforehand, in a Constitution to run for twenty years, define specifically what the board of supervisors shall do. Is there any gentleman here who will grant a board of supervisors an unrestricted power of legislation? By no means. You must specify beforehand the power of any such board as that. Gentlemen will not maintain that they shall have general powers of legislation. Such a proposition subverts all the theories of a well constructed Legislature, which require two bodies as a check, one on the other. Here is this volume alluded to by the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], of two thousand laws. I will venture to say there are not fifty public laws in it.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—There are a thousand laws only; two thousand pages.

Mr. FOLGER—There are not fifty of a general nature. It is this pressure upon the representatives of small local constituencies that produces this kind of legislation. The Committee on the Judiciary of the last Senate reported adversely to many of such bills, but by the earnestness of representatives the committee was sometimes overridden. Though many of these could have been disposed of elsewhere, they came here, showing that the evil is not remedied by giving powers of local legislation to boards of supervisors or other local bodies. The bill is sent to the local representative, and he is held responsible for its passage. He desires to gratify his constituency, as I said before, on account of his reputation as an able, and tried, and expert legislator, a man who has influence with his fellow. That is the way volumes swell to 2,000 laws. Now, the State generally is not over-legislated; but it is the localities which pour into this great hopper of legislation at the capitol, the grist which is ground out here when it can as well be ground out elsewhere. I am, therefore, for large districts, and I must join in the surprise of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], at the disposition manifested to retain the single senate district system. I must say that when I came here in June, if any one had asked me what changes would have taken place in this Constitution, I would have said there will be a return to the large Senate districts, for experience has demonstrated the imperfection of the single district system. I had not heard the contrary expressed until within the last month. And I must caution gentlemen that they are not fully informed of the popular will and sentiment on this subject for I do believe that there exists in this State a desire for a return to the large senate district system, which, lifting the Senator above the caprice or dissatisfaction of narrow limits shall leave the representative independent, and fix an extended term of office which gives time for the tide of public opinion to flux and reflux, before the representative is brought to his account for official action.

Mr. EDDY—I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard,] now under consideration before the committee, which provides for single senate districts. My reason is, that the large district system is not, in my opinion, as has been so ably discussed by my colleague [Mr. Graves,] demanded by the people of whom we are the representatives. I have yet to hear from the first man outside of this Convention who is in favor of a change in the present system, or who feels any dissatisfaction connected with it. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this Convention is taking upon itself quite too much business, which is entirely uncalled for. There seems to be a disposition to enter in detail into the minutiae of legislation not anticipated by the people, and which does not come within the province of this Convention to consider. The first great and all-important measure demanded of this Convention by the people, and which mainly induced the electors of this State to call together this Constitutional Convention, was the re-organization of our present over-burdened and unjust judicial system. Second, that the Empire State might be permitted to pronounce emphatically, as an example to other States, in favor of universal manhood suffrage. It is, of course, expected that this Convention will, by constitutional enactments, do all in its power to prevent future corruption by State officials, and also to prevent an undue and unwarrantable expenditure of the public money. Aside from this, sir, no radical changes are demanded or expected from this Convention. Let us remember the fact that the people have yet to render their verdict upon our work, and our duty is to conform as far as possible to their wishes, that our labor may receive their sanction.

Mr. BICKFORD—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Bickford, and was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 64 yeas to 24 noes.

Whereupon the committee arose, and the President resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and ask leave to sit again.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on granting leave.

Mr. GRELEY—I trust we will not grant leave to sit again. At this rate we will never get through. If we take the subject from the committee we will get on.

Mr. WEED—What is the result, under the rules, if we refuse to grant leave?

The PRESIDENT—The result will be that the report will lose its place in the order of business.

Mr. WEED—Will it throw out the whole subject?

The PRESIDENT—It will be a virtual rejection of the article.

The question was then put on the motion to grant leave to sit again, and it was declared carried.

The PRESIDENT—The hour of two having arrived, under the order of the Convention a recess will be taken until half-past seven o'clock.

So the Convention took a recess.

The Convention re-assembled at half-past seven o'clock, when it resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., Mr. FULLER, of Monroe, in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the pending question to be on the amendment offered by Mr. Ballard to the amendment offered by Mr. E. Brooks to section 2 of the article as reported by the committee.

Mr. VAN COTT—In the progress of this debate, sir, to which I have been a very close listener, I have occasionally taken a note with the thought that I might occupy the time of the Convention to answer some of the views that have been presented in support of the single district system in opposition to the larger. If it were in order, sir, I would very much like to take the sense of the Convention upon a proposition to abolish the Senate. I would like to bring gentlemen to a position where they would be obliged to consider the original principle on which the legislative department of the government is divided into two chambers, for every reason which any gentleman could give in support of such a division would be a refutation of the argument in favor of the smaller, and an argument in support of the larger divisions reported by the committee. Sir, where is the use of having two houses organized upon substantially the same basis, and working substantially through the same processes to reach the same results? If I were to propose to divide the Assembly into two houses of equal number, the absurdity of the proposition would strike the mind at once. If I were to propose to elect the whole one hundred and sixty members constituting the Legislature, and to cut off thirty-two and to send them to a different chamber to deliberate, the absurdity of the proposition would strike the mind at once. We come back, sir, therefore to the plan of the two houses, not to make like, but to make unlike, to produce the system of checks and balances, and to preserve the balance of the system, not by the independence, but by the dissimilarity of the two bodies. Now, sir, in the constitution of the smaller body we followed originally the system of the British Constitution. We had then, in the smaller body, a hereditary branch of the Legislature, an aristocratic branch of the Legislature if you please, and the opportunities belonging to wealth, and to fixed position and to permanency, a larger knowledge and a larger comprehension of affairs, and, through these qualities, that species of conservatism which holds the machinery of the State so that its motion may not be so irregular, rapid, or violent as to shake to pieces the system of which it is a part. They have the opportunity of bringing great experience and very maturely developed qualities of statesmanship, and that reserve which is necessary to check the more rapid progress of the more popular body. Passing from the British Constitution to an experience which is entirely our own, we have in the constitution of the legislative department of the Federal government, the House of Representatives, elected from smaller districts and for shorter terms, and the Senate, elected from the States, and for terms three times as long as that of the House of Representatives, and, without following very closely and uniformly any system, we find in all our State constitutions the same general principle of two chambers, fully embodied and imbedded as a part of our American political system. Now, sir, in 1777 we constituted our State governments upon the same principle. We made larger districts for the smaller body. We made longer terms for the smaller body. We introduced, so far as was consistent with the principle of our institutions, the conservative and permanent elements into the smaller body of the Legislature. We adhered to that system until 1821. We continued to adhere to the principle and substance of the system until 1846. In 1846 an epidemic of constitutional change broke out in the country, and with it, and peculiarly characterizing it, was the principle of the decentralization of power, which has disintegrated and almost resolved society into its original elements, and brought on anarchy with corruption. Now, sir, why not adhere to the principle of the system or else abolish it altogether? I am for preserving the substance of the system or else abolishing it. The form, the empty shell of the system is but a mere snare and not a help to us. I remember, sir, an anecdote that is told of Sir Isaac Newton. That philosopher having a favorite cat, in order to give it free access to his study, cut a large hole in his study door. By and by, a kitten was born to the cat, and then the philosopher cut a smaller hole in his study door through which the kitten might pass. Sir, do we not do the same thing in substance when we bring these two houses together into a legislative department, exercising the same functions under the same influences? Have we not one hole too many? Do we not go entirely beyond the reason of the thing in constituting the second branch of the Legislature, when we depart so widely from the principle on which we separate the Legislature into two chambers? Then you will observe the practice of the State in affirmance of the general principle which has some value here as our guide, as indicating the general sentiment of the people. We have departed from the principle in respect to this particular thing, while we have adhered to it in general. You take the general constitution of the Legislature. You take your supervisors; you elect them in small districts. You take your members of Assembly, and you elect them in larger districts. You take your Senate; you elect it in still larger districts. You take your Governor, a part of the legislative department under the Constitution, and you elect him in a still larger district. As you diminish the number you increase the district. As you make more important the officer and his functions, you give him a larger constituency. Take the judicial department, and you follow out the same principle. Your county judges you elect in each county of the State. Your supreme court judges you elect in eight judicial districts. Your court of appeals judges you elect by a general ticket, with the whole State for the constituency of the court. As the court rises in importance, and you wish to give dignity to it, as the functions you intrust to it are larger or more important or more influential, you bring it upon this large constituency, and take the larger voice or the larger vote of the people in its creation. Now, sir, I ask you to apply the same principle which you apply so steadily elsewhere to the legislative department, to return to that sober reason and sound philosophy with which we commenced the organization of government in this State. A gentleman that I listened to with great interest the other day, the gentleman from Lewis [Mr. Brown], put off on this Convention this striking fallacy: He says, "If your thirty-two districts are too numerous, if eight are better than thirty-two, then four are better than eight, and one is better than four." The gentleman forgets that in propositions you have to observe measure and proportion. I am not obliged, because I am content with enough, to take either too much or too little. The gentleman fails to mark the distinction which pervades all practical affairs. The gentleman wishes to build himself a convenient house, and arrange an elegant suite of rooms. He proposes thirty-two. I tell him thirty-two are too many, that he will make a lot of pigeon-holes instead of apartments, and suggest to him the number of eight. He says, "If eight are better than thirty-two, four would be better than eight, and one would be better than four." I propose to build a ship, and the gentleman says to me, "Take the Half-moon which brought Hendrick Hudson to the discovery of the great river—take that for your model," I say, "No; that is too small for modern uses." Then he says, "Take the Great Eastern." "The Great Eastern is too large." May I not observe this system of proportion in adapting my requirements to the wants of the occasion out of which it grows? Is not the fallacy of the gentleman obvious; is it not clear that I am not obliged, because I am discontented with thirty-two, to take one; and am I obliged, because one is too few, or four too few to go on up to thirty-two? I may take a medium number; a number at any convenient point. Then we were met with another observation that has been repeated throughout this Convention as though it really amounted to something. It is said that if we go from thirty-two districts to eight we are going back on the Constitution of 1846 and going back upon the people. Well, sir, what does this idea of going back amount to? I suppose, sir, that we were sent here to go either back or forward, and it is quite immaterial, as far as the principle is involved, whether we do what he calls going back or going forward. We were sent here to change the Constitution. We were sent here to ascertain what part of the Constitution reason and experi-once approved as good, and what part of it reason and experience rejected as not good, and we were to make the changes that reason and experience prompted. We go back, therefore, to the extent to which we make any such change in the Constitution; and we were sent here to go back, in that sense, or else, sir, why are we here at all? We have heard the opinions of members of the Convention of 1846 constantly quoted and flung in our face as though these opinions were to decide anything here. These opinions are in the Constitution, and with the total results of these opinions, as so embodied, the people were not content, and they sent us here to reform their work, because they were discontented with that work. We go on departing from their opinions as far as necessary. We departed from the Constitution of 1777 to that of 1821; from that of 1821 to that of 1846; from that of 1846 to that of 1861. We departed from the Confederation to the Constitution. We go on as a self-governed people, and the people are constantly developing in intellectual power, by education and experience, and adapt their institutions to existing wants; and it is precisely that process which we are attempting to follow here. Then, it is said that we are placing the representatives further from the people by taking larger districts than in taking small. Now, sir, I do not quite comprehend that proposition. I do not see why I am further from my representative when he is elected in a larger, than when he is elected in a smaller district. I vote for supervisors; I vote for members of Assembly; I vote for Senators: I vote for a judge in a district consisting of one-eighth part of the State, I vote for court of appeals judges in a district composed of the whole State; I vote for Governor. In every instance, I exercise my power directly upon my representative. There is no intermeddling. There is no go-between separating me and my representative. He is brought directly in contact with me, and I with him, by deliberate choice, for the functions which he is to perform in the government, and it seems to me it is a mere idle refinement to talk about separating constituents more widely from their representatives, whether you elect in the larger or smaller districts. The fact that he is my choice, without any intermediary, is the fact that brings him in direct personal contact with me. Now, the gentleman from Orange [Mr. Fullerton] told us the other day that the constituent knew the Senator when he was from a district representing a thirty-second part of the State, but that the knowledge of the constituent did not go beyond the bound of the narrow district; that he was able, in the exercise of his political sagacity, to find one man in a narrow district who was fit to be a Senator.

"Diogenes his lantern needs no more;
One Senator is found, the search is o'er."

The capacity of the constituent was limited by the bounds of a single narrow district. Now, sir, I do not so apprehend the intelligence of the people of the State of New York, and the gentleman will excuse me if I say that all that sort of talk seems to me to be a libel upon the intelligence of the people of the State of New York. Either the candidates for Senators and for other high officers must be so exceedingly small that we need a microscope to discover them, or the people must be exceedingly ignorant or narrow, or there must be intelligence enough to search over a considerable district, and to know a man that passes through the various grades of office, or who holds a position socially or politically in a large community for a considerable number of years—to know who are the men best fitted by intelligence and integrity of character to represent them in the Senate of the State; and I say again, I think all this sort of remark about the narrowness of the people, and the limit of their intelligence, is a libel upon the good sense of the people. Now, sir, I believe that the true way to deal with the people is not to flatter them, but to tell them the truth and to give them honest advice; and I think the part that we in this Convention are to perform is just this: not to look for things that may be thought at present popular, not to look for things that are flattering that may be said of the people, but to look the facts of the situation in the face, to find out what is best, and to tell the people the honest truth, and keep to our honest convictions of the truth; and I think, so proceeding, we ought to tell the people that they ought to exercise a large and careful choice in the election of their representatives to the smaller and in some respects more important department of the Legislature; that they ought to select the candidates for that place with regard to a larger intelligence and a larger character; that they should not be selected through the narrow interests of petty localities, but they should be men of mind large enough to comprehend the wants and the interests of the great State of which the districts are but parts. I think that is the advice we ought to give to them, as the result of our careful consideration of the plan upon which the legislative department of the government is formed, with its division of legislative chambers.

Mr. LANDON—I should not participate in this debate to-night, sir, did I not deem that some of the arguments advanced this morning in support of the large district system were more specious than sound. The gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] told us that the principal object of the large district system is to procure the independence of the Senator. What is that independence? He explains to us that the Senator coming from the present single district, in the discharge of his duty, is annoyed by the wants of his constituents. The independence that he seeks, then, is—independence of his constituents. He wishes a Senator to be placed in so large a district, that he may be able to despise and evade the wants of his constituents. Sir, when we have that kind of a Senator, we will have a Senator that will be irresponsible; for the responsibility which he owes to the State, which is all the gentleman desires, will not oppress him. Sir, when we have power, and do not add to it responsibility to the source from which that power is derived, we create tyrants. The history of tyrants all over the world is the history of power joined to irresponsibility. Do we want such a system? Do we want Senators in this State to bear the exalted honors of office and be free from its cares and responsibilities—to be independent of their constituents? I think not. I think we want men who should be responsible to some power somewhere; and when we divorce the power from the responsibility, we have lost control over it, and our servants may represent us here and they may not. Again, sir, these districts have been spoken of contemptuously as small. Do they not consist of one hundred and fifteen thousand people, and are one hundred and fifteen thousand people nobody? Are their rights not worth preserving? Are not the rights and interests of one hundred and fifteen thousand worth the care and consideration of any Senator? Are the rights of one hundred and fifteen thousand men of such a character that they can be safely committed, or might as well be committed, as the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] says, to the small politicians, "the vampires of the State?" I think it is a strange doctrine to be announced here, that the rights of so large a body of men, larger than the inhabitants of some of the States of the Union, will under the present system naturally be committed to the care of vampires. Gentlemen clamor for experience in the Senate. Does experience always bring virtue? The gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] this morning, referring to his own experience, showed how experience—

Mr. FOLGER—Will the gentleman allow me to explain? I disclaim ever having used such means myself to pass a bill in which I had an interest.

Mr. LANDON—I accept the explanation. Referring, then, to his observation, he showed us how experience might beget "log-rolling;" but there was no need for the gentleman in this hall, or anywhere throughout this State, to let us know that his own hand had not propelled the lever. Experience in legislation is sometimes accompanied with vice, but long experience makes it less repulsive.

"Vice is a monster of such hideous mien,
As, to be hated, needs but to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

May it not be so with our Senators? The gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris] says the Convention of 1846 made a mistake in abandoning the large districts. I am not old enough to speak from personal knowledge as to the working of the system under the large districts, but the gentlemen who have preceded me in this debate have referred to the contemporary evidence in regard to the character of that system, and that evidence speaks in no uncertain tone. It is evidence tending to show that Senators chosen in large districts abandon the interests of their constituents, that they come here to the capital of the State and engage in aiding the claims of aspirants to office and making money. I beg leave to read from the speech of Mr. Morris, taken from the report of the debates of the Convention of 1846:

"The great cause of calling this body together was that the constituency were misrepresented by the delegates elected. They were elected under promises and pledges they never kept, and used the power given them to make money and to advance aspirants to political favor."

It may be, sir, that many of the arguments which were introduced in 1846 in opposition to the large or quadruple system, may, under the light of subsequent experience, and now, when we have forgotten the facts upon which those arguments were based, be deemed more specious than sound. But we have this fact remaining, that that system of senatorial districts was condemned by the deliberate judgment of the people of the State who tried them; and unless we are willing to close our eyes to the experience of those who have preceded us, to the arguments which they have furnished us, to the evidence which they have transmitted to us, we cannot entirely agree with the gentlemen who kindly say that a mistake was made in 1846. What kind of a mistake was it, sir, to abandon a system which was so full of fraud and corruption? It may be that those who look back over the space of twenty years—twenty years, sir, which have perhaps thrown their shadows over the vices and left only the merits of that body perceptible—it may be that those men regard with regret the system which has passed away, and which, if they forget its merits, they may regard as one of the last landmarks of the better days of the State. These gentlemen tell us they had better Senators under the old system than under the new. This is a statement pleasant to make, and it is a statement very unpleasant to contradict. Pleasant to make, because the most of those Senators have in the lapse of twenty years gone down to their graves full of honors, and those who survive have survived all calumny, and worthily enjoy the honors which a younger race of men honor themselves with bestowing upon them; but, I think, in contrasting the present system with the past, we should be careful to guard against the illusions of the past. I think there is the same tendency in this respect as in others, the same that Dr. Johnson speaks of when he says that we estimate an author's merits when living by his worst performance, and when dead by his best; that we are always more willing to honor past than present excellence. Macaulay tells us that society, while always advancing with eager speed, is always looking backward with tender regret; that we are, in this respect, like the traveler in the Arabian desert. Beneath the caravan all is dry and bare, but far in the advance and far in the rear is the semblance of refreshing waters. We should be careful here, sir, that we do not view too keenly the vice of the present, nor the virtues of the past. The fault is not one of system. It is idle for gentlemen here to contend that we can have a good Senate as the consequence of the size or the shape of the district. It is probably true, sir, that under the old system they had some bad Senators, as we now have; that under the old system there was corruption, as there is under this. The fault, sir, is not in the system, it is in the men. "The fault, dear Brutus, is in ourselves, not in our stars, that we are underling." If we wish to have good Senators, let us urge the people themselves to an examination of this question. Let us take the political power of the State out of the hands of the professional politicians, out of the hands of the shoulder-hitters, the wire-pullers, the schemers and the demagogues. Let the people who are interested in having good government interest themselves in securing it, and then sir, I care not whether the district be large or small, we will have a good man if we can find one in the district. I am just as much opposed as any other member of this House to corrupt legislation, but if we expect to remedy the evil by large districts we are in error. I think we can find some remedy for it, in withdrawing from the Legislature cognizance of that special legislation which constantly surrounds and fills this chamber. If we destroy the source of corruption, we need not stop to purify the channel. I think, sir, that the increase of pay would tend to promote the virtue of our legislators, for I can conceive that it is hardly possible in the city of Albany, when board is advertised at four dollars a day under the caption of "great reduction in prices," for virtue to find himself well clothed, well fed, and kept respectable at three dollars a day. I do not think our people expect that. But, another reason, sir. I hold it to be a fundamental maxim in our system, that the nearer the power is kept to the people, the better that power will be preserved. I know it has been sneeringly said that that is the argument of the demagogue; but the statesman may well take a lesson from the demagogues sometimes; for it does happen that his keener instincts will discern the truth where the slow reason of the statesman will fail to discover it. I know it to be true, sir, that in our small towns throughout the State, where the people themselves assemble to nominate their officers without the intervention of delegates, the best men of the town are chosen, as a rule—a rule to which there is scarcely an exception. But when we come to the larger towns and the smaller cities, where the intervention of delegates becomes necessary, there the high standard of merit prevailing in the small towns begins to fail. The delegate begins to deal on his own account and for his own advantage; and as we increase the size of the district, we find the same falling off in virtue. Is it true, sir, of this whole State, taken as a district, that the people, in the manner in which officers are now elected, select their best men for their highest offices? I think the experience and the observation of every gentleman here will bear witness that they do not as a rule. Why, sir, in this State, rich with its men of wealth, culture and statesmanship, the best offices are dealt out to satisfy the clamors of locality and the claims of scheming politicians. All of us have voted for men whom we did not know—whom, when we came to know, we regretted having voted for. The people themselves will not vote for a bad man if they know him; and in a small district they may know him, and in a large district they cannot. So that the argument of keeping power nearer to the people is true not only in theory, but it is true in practice. The nearer it is kept there, the better will that power be exercised. Another word, sir, in regard to the representation of minorities. The single district system will tend better than any other to secure a representation to minorities until we shall adopt the system, or something like the system, introduced by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. A new and true idea in government develops as slowly as an oak grows. I am glad that this system has the advocacy and support of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and I hope he will live long enough to see the people educated to demand it; but until that time shall come, the present system will allow us occasionally to have a republican from New York and a democrat from some republican portion of the State.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—In rising to speak at this late stage of the debate, it will hardly be possible for me to throw out any new ideas. The most that I can expect to do will be to present those views that have come before the Convention in a somewhat new and different light. I am unequivocally in favor of what is known as the large district system, as in the form presented to us now—in favor of eight districts as distinguished from thirty-two. And in my mind this subject involves the whole theory of representative government; because, if we are to have two houses, one of which is a mere repetition of the other, then I say abolish one of the houses, for that is much the simplest form. What then is the real ground on which we are to have two houses of the Legislature? There have been minds of a philosophical turn which have been led to the conclusion that, as society is indivisible, therefore we ought to have one house, as expressing its indivisibility. One of the leading advocates of this theory was Benjamin Franklin, who presented his ideas in such a way as to stigmatize the opposite view with ridicule. He is reported to have said that two assemblies appeared to him like a practice he had somewhere seen of certain wagoners, who, when about to descend a steep hill with a heavy load, if they had four cattle, took off the first pair, and chaining them to the hind part of the wagon, drove them up hill, while the pair before and the weight of the load overbalancing the strength of those behind, drew them slowly and moderately down the hill. By this allusion he succeeded in carrying the State of Pennsylvania for a single house; but a wiser statesman than Franklin, the elder Adams, made use of this incident in the true spirit of philosophy. Using the words of Harrington, somewhat varied, he says, "Oh! the depth of the wisdom of God, who, by the simple invention of a poor carter, has revealed to mankind the whole mystery of a commonwealth, which consists in dividing and equalizing forces and in controlling the weight of the load and the activity of one part by the strength of the other." And this great statesman expended great labor in endeavoring to show from all experience and all history that there must be two houses in a representative government in order that the activity and progress of the one may be balanced by the conservatism of the other. Now, sir, I speak more specifically of two great reasons why we need two houses of the Legislature here; first, negatively, that we may prevent improper legislation from being introduced; and, secondly, positively, that we may employ one house as a veto or a check upon the other, and that we may enable the people themselves to correct their hasty action. The statesman finds that there is often one layer of public opinion under another, and he seeks slowly and carefully to find that which lies underneath. Now, sir, if these principles be true, it will follow that the only mode in which these double results can be accomplished is by a diverse organization of the two houses. How shall we have a valuable appeal if one court is organized precisely like another? How shall we check the passions of the people if the two houses reflect equally those passions, and are equally filled with men of a headlong and a passionate character. The authors of the Federalist say wisely that it is politic to distinguish the two houses from each other by every circumstance which comports with a due harmony in all proper measures and genuine principles of republican government. Now, sir, it has been already said in the progress of this debate, that we have abundant illustrations of this principle, especially in the two great and stable governments of the present time, those of England and the United States. The statesmen of England understand this principle so well that they seek to introduce diverse elements even into the same house. In the very last reform movement of the present month, it was seen fit by the English statesmen to introduce a member for the university of London, as was previously the case with Oxford and Cambridge, and we know well that in the organization of the other house very diverse elements are brought in contact. Now, if this is so true in the single house, how much more is it true that the true spirit of legislation demands there shall be diverse elements in the two houses? I shall not dwell on this branch of the argument, as I have already been anticipated in it by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Van Cott]. Now, sir, if we come to our own present condition, do we need this diverse organization for our own protection? Why, sir, we have been told by gentlemen familiar with the condition of affairs in Albany, that corruption has stolen into every department of the Legislature: it has even defiled the sweet hand of charity. Whether that be true or not, we are informed that there is a species of "log-rolling" here which is akin to corruption. Now, sir, what do gentlemen in the Convention propose in order to meet the public sentiment on this subject? They have but two things to propose as far as I have heard. One is to give members a salary; the other is to endeavor to prevent special legislation. Now, sir, in regard to the first—can dishonest men be made honest by paying them a salary? Have thieves ever been prevented from thieving by a voluntary contribution? In regard to the second, the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] has told us that it is impossible, as I believe it is, to prevent special legislation. We must have it or else abolish the Legislature. But even if we could abolish special legislation, what would be the next step? Suppose we had only general laws, then the effort of an unscrupulous lobby would be to obtain special legislation under the guise of general law. If a man has a special provision which he wishes to have applied to a corporation in which he is interested, he will seek to alter the general law of corporations; if he wishes to release himself from a hated marriage tie, he will seek to alter the general law of divorce. There are gentlemen who hear me who know that this kind of effort has been made already in our Legislature—an effort to obtain a general law to meet particular cases; but that which has already transpired is as nothing to that which would be experienced if we should abolish all special legislation. Now, sir, you cannot stop corruption by any constitutional ptery or philosophy. You must have men in the Legislature. How to secure them is the problem. I have no faith in increased salaries, no faith in the abolition of special legislation. I only hope, for the sake of New York, that we shall have true and faithful men. How are we to get such men? That is the question. Now, sir, in my opinion the only mode presented to us for obtaining these better men is to take the course presented by this committee. I do not think it will accomplish everything for us, that the reign of virtue will necessarily return in full; but I do believe it will accomplish something; I do believe we will get men to represent the State in the Senate as distinguished from men who represent localities in the Assembly. That, I believe, is the true system. As I have endeavored to show, we are here to organize two houses on the principle of diversity, and the only diversity admissible under our system is that of a larger or smaller constituency. We cannot, as they do in the English Parliament, give representation to the educational interest. We cannot give it to towns and cities as distinguished from counties. The only mode left for us to make it sure that the great interests of the State shall be represented is to furnish in the one house men from the State substantially, and to the other house men from localities; and we do substantially arrive at this result by electing the Senators from large districts. Now, sir, it seems to me that the two great evils from which the State of New York suffers are the spirit of public parsimony, and the spirit of locality. By this public parsimony we do not pay public men what they really earn, and by that spirit of locality we have dwarfed their aims and purposes, and kept them from rising to that position which they would have attained if they had not been obliged to account to a local constituency. As the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] told us, this constituency will call for an account, and most rigidly exact it, unless the course of their representative, on questions in which they are locally interested, is precisely in accordance with their own views. What have been the objections urged by the gentlemen on the other side to the large district system? They seem to me to resolve themselves into three. One we have heard urged is, that there is likely to be a return of the Albany regency; another, that we should have in the Senate decayed and worn-out politicians; Another, that the voice of the people is against this change. Now, sir, how have the gentlemen heard the voice of the people? Why, in general through the local press. And what is the local press? It is the voice, so far as we know at present, of a single man who has not heard the discussions on this subject, and who, if he did hear them, might change his views; while the members of the Convention are here for the purpose of hearing the discussions and then acting upon them. This same author, Harrington, to whom I have before alluded, though somewhat visionary in many of his suggestions, yet made very many sagacious remarks. Among others, he endeavored to liken the Legislature and the people to two maidens who are dividing a cake between them. One says to the other, "I will divide and you shall choose." And that he says is like the Legislature and the people. The Legislature are to examine, discuss, determine, or to "divide," as he called it, and the people are to choose. I think that is our function here. We are to make the very best Constitution we know how, and then we are to submit it to the people. If the people reject it, I shall not despair. Our thoughts will be on record, and if they are right the people will some time agree to them, and will either send us or others here to put their wishes in form. I hope no one of us will ever adopt a rule which he thinks is radically wrong, merely because he supposes there may be some person or persons among the people who may object to it. Next, sir, in regard to the Albany regency. I think that is an idle fear. The Albany regency is but a word to conjure with. The time has been when it was a power, but it has irrevocably gone. Who is there now to take up the tangled threads, even in this Convention, and hold them in one direction for a single moment? Not one. The mighty men who wielded the forces of party are dead or decaying, and they have and can have no successors. The only use that can now be made of the Albany regency is to frighten men from their propriety, as is attempted to be done in this Convention, and as is sometimes done with children in a nursery.

When Rielingham inspires the tale;
Chill's dark matrons long shall tame
The forward child by Bertram's name."

Now, finally, what is the only other objection? That we are to have aged men in the Senate—old politicians. This is not to be the era of young men, but the era of old men. I am one of those who believe the Senate has its appropriate name, derived as it is from an assembly of the elder men, and I shall not regret to see it largely composed of that class. The time will come when the younger men, in the ripeness of their years and in their wisdom will reach it; but I am certainly not willing to have it said to us, as old Lord Chancellor Hatton said in Queen Elizabeth's time, of the men in his day. He says, "There are in public life many young men, raw young men, negligent and careless, and I think it a great shame to this Commonwealth that it is attempted to be ruled by such men." Now, sir, without any aspersion at all upon the present Senate, I have only to say, it is no harm, but rather a benefit to a State, to have one body of the Legislature which is filled by the wisdom of the older men, while the other house should be so organized as to represent the activity and earnestness of the younger men in the community.

Mr. HARDENBURGH—I am one of those who oppose this system, which has been correctly

The well-dressed gentleman who had instigated the moving of this notice, and carefully drawn up the bill amending the charter of the wealthy corporation of the city of New York, was around in the hotels mingling in conversation with these anxious gentlemen, and was very soon employed by them to attempt to ferret out the man who was at the bottom of this mischief and of their anxious troubles. They were advised by him to go home, and that this well-dressed operator would attend to their affairs. In a few days thereafter this bill was reported from the proper committee, and immediately up came another two car-loads of corporators, directors, agents, detectives, attorneys, and operators to see about preventing the passage of this injurious bill. Within twenty-four hours after their arrival in the city of Albany, this well-dressed operator, who had been "dead broke" before, and who had succeeded in securing an employment as "lobby" for the corporation, was flush with money, and able to pay all his hotel bills, and meet all his other obligations, including those recognized as honorable among sporting men. The corporators went home, having learned that gas costs something in Albany as well as in New York. In a few days afterward, in some of the New York papers, I saw charges of legislative corruption in connection with this notice and bill, and that the Legislature had been bought; and there seemed then to be two sides, one party charging the Legislature with being bought to interfere with the vested rights of the corporation, which was dividing nearly fifty per cent dividend, and the other party charging them with being bought off from the passage of a just and beneficial measure; so that they got the newspaper name and reputation of being bought to interfere, and bought not to interfere, neither of which was true. Now, sir, this is a specimen of very much of the legislative corruption, so much proclaimed through the newspapers, and probably there were not more than two members in the Assembly who knew anything about the operation that was going on. And nobody at the time knew anything about the motives of the party instigating this move. Now, that, sir, is one way in which charges of legislative corruption are started. Whole bodies of men are stigmatized with being corrupt and dishonest, and with being bought and sold, and here in convention we are working to provide some way to remedy this supposed evil. One gentleman says we must give members of the Legislature better compensation, so they will not be obliged to steal. Another gentleman says we must select them from larger districts, as though we should secure better or abler men. Now, I am one of those who believe that a constituent should be acquainted with the candidate for whom he votes. I believe I can cast my vote as intelligently for a man within my present senatorial district as I could if it was doubled or quadrupled in size. I have no doubt about it. Now, sir, I concur entirely with the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] that this Convention can present to the people for their adoption a Constitution which will, by the force of its own terms, take from the Legislature the power to legislate upon local matters, exclusively local matters, which will take out of the Legislature great temptations for log-rolling. I do not intend to say that this system of log-rolling is always corrupt as far as the individual Senator or member of Assembly is concerned. We know that gentlemen, sometimes, to save some great and beneficent measure or act, are compelled to yield to smaller evils in the passage of acts which their better judgment disapproves. In that way a system of log-rolling is sometimes adopted. If you will exclude from the power of the Legislature legislation upon a great many wholly local questions, you will take from them the power of committing what is called "legislative corruption," or log-rolling, to a great extent. We should, furthermore, present a Constitution for adoption by the people that will take away from the Legislature the power of giving away the money of the people without limitation and without constitutional obligation. That undoubtedly, in my opinion, is a source of great corruption. If you cut off the power of the Legislature to grant the money or property of the State, to be raised by taxation from the people, to the thousand and one institutions that are springing up everywhere in the State, you will dry up one source of legislative corruption. Now, sir, for an instance of this kind of general legislative corruption, if the committee will bear with me patiently for one moment, though not in my legislative experience. A country member came to this hall a few years ago. He was utterly ignorant of legislation, ignorant of what was necessary, and above all things ignorant of the chief of abominations known as the general appropriation bill. On reaching that bill, he read it over; he found the salaries of the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, the State officers and judges, all put down in the bill in accordance with law. He read on and came to appropriations of large sums of money, $10,000, $15,000 and $50,000, to the thousand and one institutions that are springing up in all the large towns of the State. Not knowing how or why the State should tax the people at large to support these local institutions—local in their origin and in their benefits—he moved to strike them out; he wanted an explanation. He was simply, and without delay or discussion, howled down by the combined votes of those from the large towns seeking the money. Buffalo had several institutions that had to have an appropriation. New York had several institutions that had to draw from the treasury. Utica had a few institutions that had to draw from the treasury of the State. Oswego, Rochester and every city, and nearly every large village in the State, had in that omnibus bill an appropriation for institutions that had never been organized under any law, or created by any statute of the State, or by the Constitution, or by authority of the Legislature. Members would not go back upon their local claims, and hence there was a species of log-rolling, by which "if you will vote, Mr. Baker, for Buffalo, I will vote for Montgomery"—if Albany will vote for New York, why, New York will reciprocate the favor of taking the people's money for these private local institutions. This member who was so astounded at the general appropriation bill, and to

Carpenter] when he was discussing the pending question. The question is not whether the term will be four years, or two years, or three years; it is whether it shall be the single district, and whether they are eight or ten, or whether they are thirty-two, is of no consequence here. The question is whether the district, whatever it may be, shall be represented by a single man, not running four men, one under the shadow and wing of another. That is the difficulty I see in any other district system. Now, in 1846, when this system was abolished, it was not because of the fact that there was an Albany regency. It was not because of the fact that the system, in the respect of that concentration of power, had become a failure. Sir, as was shadowed out in the report of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], even in that early day the political thinkers of that hour desired to adopt some plan, to seek out some remedy, by which minorities might be represented. Not having the full knowledge that the distinguished journalist from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] had, they resorted to this system of smaller districts, so that, to that extent at least, minorities might be represented. But, adopt these large districts, and I would like to see how minorities can be represented. Almost every member of this Convention, I think every single member of this Convention, is in favor of a certain sprinkling of representation on the part of the minority in this State, divided as the parties are by simply fifteen or twenty thousand, and yet the one party overwhelmed in both branches of the Legislature. Putting them down into smaller districts you do reach that desired end. That was the object of the Convention of 1846, and it went as far as their knowledge at that time permitted them to go, and I never shall abandon it as far as I am concerned. Now, I think the gentleman who has spoken on this question [Mr. T. W. Dwight], and made his argument in respect to the division of these two Houses—namely, that there should be a distinct and diverse body, the Senate from the Assembly—fell into an error. I differ entirely from him. It was with no idea that the Senate should be older, or that they should be better men, or purer men, or more intelligent men than the House of Assembly, that John Jay, who drafted the Constitution of 1777, and from which the ideas of the Constitution of the United States were taken, first started this idea of two Houses. Will any man deny but that the Assembly should be just as intelligent as the Senate? No man here will deny it at all; none will deny it. What, then, was his purpose? It was simply that the two Houses should differ in respect of the tenure of office, to put one body into power for four years or six years, so that the lower House which came annually into this hall to make and pass laws might be subjected to the check (often necessary in moments of excitement and passion, such as might be illustrated by the know-nothingism of our own day) of the House having a longer term, and that such House might hold that check, and pause until it could be discovered whether the people were ready for the proposed movement. Tenure of office is all that could, and all that was intended to be settled by the framers originally of this system; and I claim that that is all you want now. I do not understand that, when I vote upon the proposition of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], I am voting at all upon any tenure system; I am voting upon the naked, bare proposition whether we will have this Senate elected by the people directly, or whether we will have the responsibility divided, by electing four or five together; we can discuss the other propositions hereafter. I shall vote, therefore, Mr. Chairman, upon this question, for a single district system as against the compound district system, in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], and for the reasons I have given.

Mr. AXTELL.—Mr. Chairman, I have listened very attentively to this debate during the time it has been progressing, and I have earnestly desired to be convinced of the necessity and the expediency of adopting the principle embodied in the report of the committee. But up to this time the arguments to which I have listened have failed to convince me of the expediency of adopting large senatorial districts. Those arguments would have force if we were discussing the propriety of leaving the appointment of Senators to somebody outside of the people of this State. If we were proposing that Senators should be appointed, there would be to my mind more of force and pertinency in the arguments which have been presented in support of the report of the committee. I do not understand, if the people are to elect in large districts, how the character of the Senate is to be improved by thus extending the districts. I have failed to see as yet how that is to be done. Is it a fact that the dignity of the Senate would be increased by large districts? I have heard a great deal said on this floor about the "dignity" of the Senate, the importance of having a dignified body, and I have tried to picture to myself a Senate that would realize this ideal of exalted dignity if the views of the gentlemen were to take form in the Constitution. I have thought it was possible that there might be an illustration of the idea of the country parson when he spoke of the dignity of dullness or the dullness of dignity. Is it true, Mr. Chairman, that dignity in the Senate is the main thing to be sought? And is it true that dignity is increased by an increase of territory or an enlarged constituency? Is that true as a matter of fact? Then, if that be true, I submit that when you make a constituency of one hundred thousand you quadruple the dignity of the Senate as compared with the Assembly. And if the proposition of the committee prevail, then the dignity of the Senate will be made as sixteen to one. I submit that no Senate could live under such an accumulation of dignity as that. No system, no mere political arrangement will secure that type of character, that manliness, that broad and comprehensive statesmanship which is necessary in a Senator, if these elements are wanting among the people, and I do not assume that they are wanting. No mere extension of constituency can secure superior talents and qualifications. Take as an example the Senate of the United States (and I have a most profound respect for that body), up, let me make this suggestion. I suppose it to be true, as well from the census returns, as from our observation, that the population in the interior of this State, outside of the cities, is rather a receding, than an advancing population, or in other words those who live upon farms in the State of New York, are making their farms much larger than they were, and many of the citizens in the western part of the State are selling out and going West, and the population there is being considerably reduced, while upon the sea-board the population is increasing in a ratio entirely unparalleled in the previous history of the State. Sir, the census returns upon which this report is based give the sum of 726,000, as the entire population of the city of New York. Whereas the census taken by the Federal government in 1860, five years previous gives the census return in the city of New York, at 813,000. Sir, the population, as I have already stated, is over one million in that city. Whether you give it five senators or whether you give it six senators, you fail to give the city of New York that fair and equitable ratio of representation which justly belongs to her. Sir, one-fourth of the people of the entire State of New York live upon Manhattan Island, throwing out the tens of thousands who live in Kings county, Queens county, Richmond and Westchester. If you were to divide the people on the ratio of representation, making the number of the inhabitants at 4,000,000, the city would be entitled to eight representatives rather than six. But I will not protract the discussion. My hope is, that in the end some fairer proposition will be made by the majority of this Convention than has been submitted, and seeing no other way to secure what seems to me a better plan, I must vote for the amendment which has been submitted by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard].

The question was then put on the first part of the amendment offered by Mr. Ballard: "The State shall be divided in thirty-two districts," and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 79 to 35.

The CHAIRMAN—The question is now on the second part of the proposition of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard].

Mr. TOWNSEND—I move that the committee do now rise report progress and ask leave to sit again.

SEVERAL DELEGATES—"No, No".

Mr. BURRILL—I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I move that the motion lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman [Mr. W. C.] is informed that it is not in order to lay the question on the table in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALVORD—I believe that under the rule this will lie on the table. The same rule governs in committee that governs in Convention. Under a rule of the Convention the motion to reconsider must lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of a different opinion. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Burrill] to reconsider the vote which has just been taken.

Mr. ALVORD—I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair; and I will state my ground of appeal. It has been again and again ruled, from the commencement of this Convention up to this time, that a motion to reconsider as a matter of necessity, under our rules goes over for a day, and as a Committee of the Whole sitting here confined by the terms of our rules and the Convention, we cannot go beyond that. We cannot have any other rules than such rules as obtain in the Convention. In Committee of the Whole all questions of reconsideration, up to this time, have been with the consent of the committee laid over under the rule which governed us in the Convention. We have no right to arrogate to ourselves, in Committee of the Whole power that is not specifically granted to us by the rules of the Convention in that regard. It is for this reason that I most respectfully beg to differ with the Chair in its rulings upon this subject. I trust the Chair will reflect for a moment, and look over the rule as it exists, and decide my point of order well taken, and relieve me from the necessity of appealing to the committee.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I wish to read rule 28:

"A motion for reconsideration shall be in order at any time, and may be moved by any member of the Convention; but the question shall not be taken on the motion to reconsider on the same day on which the decision proposed to be reconsidered shall take place, unless by unanimous consent; and a motion to reconsider being once put and lost, shall not be renewed, nor shall any subject be a second time reconsidered without the consent of the Convention. If the motion to reconsider shall not be made on the same day or the day after that on which the decision proposed to be reconsidered was made, three days' notice of the intention to make the motion shall be given."

There is another rule I have been requested to read.

"Rule 19. The same rules shall be observed in Committee of the Whole as in the Convention, as far as applicable, except that the previous question shall not apply nor shall the yeas and nays be taken on a division."

The CHAIRMAN—The opinion of the Chair is that the rule is not applicable to proceedings in Committee of the Whole from the nature of the case. The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question before the Committee is, shall the decision of the Chair be sustained.

The question was put on sustaining the decision of the Chair, and it was declared carried on a division by a vote of 49 to 49.

The CHAIRMAN—The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Burrill] to reconsider the vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] which has just been taken.

Mr. BURRILL—I withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN—The question is on the second proposition of the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard].

Mr. FOLGER—I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN—A further amendment is not same denial. But, let me ask, cannot the system of log-rolling to which the gentleman alluded be resorted to just as well, and more successfully, under the system proposed? Will not the combined interest and influence of four be more potent and therefore more to be coveted than that of one? Again, Mr. Chairman, I do not like to change any system, especially in the organic law of the State, unless there are cogent reasons for it, and especially when not demanded by the people. I see no very strong reason for the change in this matter sought to be effected by the report of the majority of the committee. The people have not asked it so far as I can discover. I have not heard a single expression in favor of a change, off the floor of this house. I have made up my mind, for the reasons above stated, that it is not desirable to abandon a system we have tried for twenty-one years with very general satisfaction to the people, as far as I can judge, and return to a system which, after a trial of seventy years, was emphatically condemned by the people. I shall therefore vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard].

Mr. BAKER—I had not intended to participate in the discussion on the report, and now only desire to say, that if the report of the committee is sustained, so far as my county is concerned, we will be entirely content, with the place assigned to us in the senatorial arrangement. But I am opposed to the report of the committee, and am in favor of the single district system. And I will briefly state my reasons. But, first, sir, I will examine for one moment the common and frequent charge we have heard made in this Convention of legislative corruption. A stranger coming into these halls and sitting here a few moments, and hearing the discussion on this subject, would suppose that every member of the Legislature, the present as well as the past, is guilty of felony and ought to be convicted of it. Now, sir, it is a strange idea that intelligent gentlemen in this Convention will get up here and charge that the Legislature is guilty of corruption, when no man can put his finger upon a solitary identical fact or circumstance to prove the truth of these charges, and, for one, unless proof can be furnished to sustain them, I am opposed to making them, and desire to say that I do not believe these wholesale charges of legislative corruption. If I must come to the conclusion that these charges are true upon mere newspaper authority, then I must come to the conclusion that this Convention is also corrupt, for I have seen in several newspapers, since the assembling of this Convention, charges of corrupt designs by parties and cliques in this Convention. It is a very easy thing for newspapers to make charges of legislative corruption—of corruption against a body of men where they will not and cannot designate the party guilty of the corruption alleged, but charge it generally upon the Convention, or Senate, or Legislature, without specifying the crime or person guilty of perpetrating it. This is unjust and unfair, cowardly and sneaking. If I, as a member of the last or present Legislature, call upon any member of this Convention who makes such flippant charges of corruption, to put his finger upon the corrupt act I have been charged by him as committing, the honorable gentleman who made such charge is bound to specify when and where, and upon what occasion, I have been so guilty of corruption. Now, sir, I do not take it as a conceded fact, or as a conceded opinion of the people founded upon facts that are known by the people or by anybody in this Convention, that the Legislature is corrupt, according to any fair or legal interpretation of that word. It is no very difficult thing, sir, for newspaper writers and correspondents to make charges of legislative corruption, concealing at the same time, the dishonest or fraudulent motive that instigated the charge. A legislative reminiscence of some twelve years ago that occurred in this hall, which I might mention would illustrate fairly about the way in which these charges are frequently and commonly brought against the Legislature. Since the Convention of 1846 a rural member from the interior of New York, had the fortune to locate himself in "Sleepy Hollow," in this hall; sitting at his right hand was another rural member, equally green as rural, from the "secluded district." One day a well-dressed gentleman came from the cloak-room and presented to the honest old gentleman from Schoharie a notice, requesting him to present it to the Legislature. The old gentleman very kindly consented, when that order of business came up, to present the notice. The telegraph having conveyed the intelligence to New York the next morning the hotels in the city of Albany were seen to be filled with the president, secretary, cashier, directors and attorneys of a certain wealthy moneyed corporation, located in the city of New York. They immediately instituted a detective system to discover who had introduced the notice. They went to the honest old rural member from Schoharie and inquired if he had introduced the notice. He didn't know exactly whether he had or not; but stated that a well-dressed, good-looking young gentleman had handed him a paper which he had consented to pass up to the Speaker's chair, when under that order of business, not knowing its contents. "Well," said the detective, "it is a bill relating to our corporation; we would like to know who handed you the paper." The old gentleman could not recognize the man who handed him the paper, but promised to point him out if he saw him again. After spending a few days here trying to ferret out the mischief-maker, the attorneys, directors and officers of this corporation went back to New York. They had no sooner left the city of Albany than this same operator appeared to the old Schoharie member and requested him to introduce the bill pursuant to the notice he had so kindly consented to give. The old gentleman looked at and examined him, so as to be able to recognize him thereafter, and introduced his bill—a bill to amend the charter of a certain corporation in the city of New York, whose stock was then worth 180. Immediately upon telegraphic notice reaching New York they came—the entire corporation, with their attorneys, agents and directors—to discover who was at the bottom of this intermeddling and intended mischief. They located themselves in the various hotels of the city of Albany.

always preferred that the details of the partition of States into districts, should be left to the Legislature. That the gentleman's amendment proposes—and we remove from the present determination of what we regard as a vital question between compound and small districts, that disturbing element which has controlled the vote of the member from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] against his views of the interest of the State. I hope, therefore, that we may proceed to vote without much longer delay, as the whole subject has been discussed on the amendment heretofore considered.

Mr. GREELEY—My objection to the amendment just proposed by the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker], is this, that it utterly fails to secure the end desired. Take a very simple case, the city of New York. The vote there of one party is more than two to one of the other. It is perfectly easy under that system for the one party to elect every single member each time with moral certainty. They could divide their votes so as to give all four of their candidates at least ten thousand majority over the highest opposing candidate. And so you will find it to be in the St. Lawrence district, on the other hand, that the republicans can elect every one of their four Senators, in defiance of this regulation. You deny to the people the right to vote for as many Senators as they are to choose, and the party largely in the majority will certainly manage to elect every one of their candidates for Senator. You accomplish nothing by your effort, except, possibly, in very closely balanced districts. You simply decide that one party must have four votes to every three votes of the other party, in order to carry the election; and it will be the case in two-thirds of the districts of the State, that one party or the other will have votes enough to elect all the Senators notwithstanding this arrangement. Now, Mr. Chairman, the proposition which I submitted has this effect: if any party has one voter where the other party has three—that is, if one-fourth of all the voters of that district are of the minority party—that minority party can certainly elect one Senator. Suppose there are of the majority in a certain town twenty thousand voters, and in the minority seven thousand voters—recognizing that as an extreme case. Now, seven thousand voters triplicated make twenty-one thousand votes for one Senator. It is not possible for twenty thousand voters to give three Senators as many votes as the minority can give their one Senator under my plan. But there is no such result under this plan. By the scheme of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker] the majority can easily give every one of their four Senators votes enough to beat the minority out of sight. [Laughter.] Now, I desire the Convention, as I may not have another opportunity, to give a few moments thought to this topic of the representation of minorities. Some gentlemen have said here, that under the proposition I made, it would be perfectly feasible to let the minority of voters elect a majority of the Senate. Let me show why that is not so. Say a district has 24,000 voters on one side and 26,000 on the other, which is an extreme case. Now, each party understands perfectly well that it can elect but two Senators. Each struggles to get the second man. Each nominates two candidates in that district, and each divides its vote. Suppose the district is composed of the two counties of Rensselaer and Albany, which are together. Each party will put up a candidate, one in each county. In each county each party will vote for the candidates of the party; but each will give the vote which the party in the county is entitled to give to the third man, to their local candidate; that is, they will duplicate the vote for the second man. Each party in Rensselaer will vote for the Albany candidate, and will duplicate the Rensselaer candidate's name on the ballot. The result will be that the party having 26,000 voters in the district will have 39,000 votes for its two candidates, and the party having 24,000 voters will have 36,000 for its two candidates. I say that it is simply impossible, under the plan I submitted, that the majority in a given district should not elect a majority of the Senators, and it is all but impossible that they should elect any more than two. There is but one possible district in this State where it might be otherwise. That is, you might carve a district out of the city of New York. You might take the 4th, 6th, and 14th wards of that city, and add on some other portions of the city, and perhaps make a district which would elect all the democratic Senators; but if you did so it would be because there was such an enormous majority that that majority could fairly be said to claim all the Senators. By the plan I propose, if you look at it carefully, you will elect twenty-four republican and twenty-one democratic Senators so long as the republicans shall have the majority they now have of 15,000 voters in the State. The moment that majority shall change, you will have a democratic majority of Senators. I do not wish the party to which I belong to have any more votes in the Legislature than its proportionate vote of the people, and when the people shall turn against it I then want the majority against it here, and my plan will give that result. The Legislature will change when the people change as it ought to do. Some gentlemen have said that "minorities are now represented." No, no, Mr. Chairman, local majorities sometimes partially balance each other; but there is now no representation of the minority. And it has become so now that in Vermont, Massachusetts and Maine the minority party has no member of the Senate whatever, and but a very few in the lower House; although in Maine the democratic vote is 41,600, yet the democratic party has not one Senator. I have no doubt it is best for the State, and best even for the dominant party in that State, that the minority party should have such a representation in the other House as its numerical strength entitles it to, and that for all purposes, it is best that there should be that balance and equation of parties in the Legislature as will conform to the relative numbers of the respective parties among the people. I beg gentlemen to consider, also, how admirably the State divides into fifteen districts such as I propose. The gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald] stated that he had carefully observed in the western part of the State that districts about find these things in it, and who had made a move to strike it out, and who was so howled down was very kindly informed by a more experienced member that he himself had been caught in the same way a few years before, and resorted to this device to get out of the difficulty. He had come to the appropriation bill, and found these items in it appropriating the money of the people of the State for mostly private and local institutions all over the State, here, there and everywhere; had tried to strike them out, and had utterly failed to do so. He went home and complained to his wife of the struggle he had had on the subject in the Assembly. An old lady who was taking tea with his wife says to him, "Why, la! Mr. P., I can tell you exactly how these things are done, and I advise Mr. Member to do the same thing. When we wanted an institution in a place I called a few of my benevolent neighbors together, a few of our old grannies of both sexes, and proceeded to the organization of our institution. I was appointed president, and Neighbor Such-a-one was appointed secretary, and Aunt Such-a-one as treasurer. We had all the rest of our neighbors put in as executive committee men. We organized an institution, and gave it a beautiful, poetical and angelical name. We sent up word to our representatives in the Legislature at Albany that they must give us an appropriation; and what do you think? We got $20,000 just by the asking." The indignant and astonished member continued that he requested his wife, before the next night, to organize a society or "institution," with the intent that if he could not strike out these appropriations he would ask a portion of them for his "institution." The next night, when the gentleman went to tea, his wife handed him a paper with the names of the president, treasurer, and executive committee of the new "institution," and enabled him to state in the Assembly that night that there was a charitable institution organized in his village or city, and that the benevolent, charitable and kind-hearted members of his institution had taken money out of their own pockets, had gone out into the streets and bestowed charity upon the poor and needy, and moved in Committee of the Whole for an appropriation for his "institution," and the Legislature gave him fifteen thousand dollars; they gave it without even inquiring how long the institution had existed, the place where it was in operation, the character of its originators, or the kind, extent or object of its benefactions, but upon the motion of the gentleman from —, whose sense of justice had prompted him to ask the Legislature to refrain from such profligate and unjust grants of the people's money to private, local and sectarian "institutions." They granted away $15,000 more of the people's money to quiet his opposition to the general plunder perpetrated under the good name of charity—and a certain town had an "institution." This, sir, is one of the modes of legislative corruption practiced here in Albany from winter to winter, and that, too, without any intentional or conscious fraud on the part of individual members instrumental in the perpetration. The remedy for these evils will not be found in the organization of large or small senatorial districts, but this Convention may provide a remedy by inserting in the draft of the Constitution to be presented to the people, a perpetual prohibition and limitation upon the power of the Legislature to give and grant away the money of the people at large to support these numerous private, local, and many times sectarian institutions, springing up all over the State with such alarming frequency as to excite the general apprehension that these pretended charities are unjust and insatiable leeches upon the public treasury of the people—

Here the gavel fell, the gentleman's time having expired.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I do not rise to protract this discussion.

A DELEGATE—I hope not.

Mr. E. BROOKS—The gentleman will be gratified. I shall not occupy the time of the committee more than two or three minutes. I find a divided duty. I am as strongly as any gentleman, almost, who has spoken, in favor of the large district system. I would be glad to see it adopted by this Convention. But when I contemplate the two propositions which are before us (throwing my amendment entirely out of the question), I find a report submitted here on the one hand, asking that this State shall be divided into eight senate districts, and that there shall be elected four Senators in each of those districts, giving an extra Senator to the city of New York. When I examine that report I see the precise result I stated on Friday last, that in the district which I represent 130,000 people are practically disfranchised upon a question of equality, or, throwing out the question of inhabitants, nearly 80,000 citizens more than in the adjoining district or if we compare voters, some 15,000 voters more, are required to make a Senator in that district than that in the adjoining district. If we compare the question of the assessment of property, I find in the district which I, in part, represent on this floor, that it requires just twice as much property, twice the amount of taxation to make a Senator in that district, as it does in either of the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh districts. Now, I am unwilling, after such a report as this, presented by a very respectable committee supposed to represent the views of the majority in this body to vote for the particular plan which has been just presented to this committee and to this Convention. But while I admit the force of the argument which has been presented here to day in favor of large districts, and while my observation of four years, experience in the Senate and as a journalist and citizen, teaches me that there will be much better representation under the larger district system than under a small district system, I fail to find any assurance in the action of this Convention that these districts can be so arranged, or will be so arranged, as to result in any equitable principle in the end. I, therefore, am reluctantly compelled, in the hope of securing more justice to those living upon the sea-board and my immediate constituents, to vote for the amendment which has been introduced by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], and I shall give my vote accordingly. Sir, while I am rule. Talk about the minority not being represented! Why, sir, a minority is represented by its delegates whether they be republicans or whether they be democrats. I dislike to hear this assumption of absolute partisanship which gentlemen are so ready to make in this Convention. In my mind, sir, there is a clear distinction between the political representative and the civil or local representative, although both characters may be combined in the person elected to represent. The candidate for legislative office may, and should, represent fully and faithfully the opinions and measures of his party on great national and State questions. But I contend, sir, that, when elected, he is no longer partisan for his district or the interests of his district. He may be partisan, and strictly partisan, upon the great issues which come up to agitate the whole people, on great State questions, which carry State policy or defeat it. But for his own district, if he be a mere partisan, he is not worthy a place in the councils of the State or nation. I deprecate the assumption or recognition of partisanship which lies at the bottom of so much mischief, and of so much corruption in the Legislature. The people should hold their representatives strictly to account to be true representatives of their towns and districts, whenever the local interests of those towns and districts require representation in the Legislature. I believe, sir, that a measure vital to a township or village, one which interests large numbers of the people of that district will not be unsafe in the hands of a political opponent who represents that local district as it ought to be represented, in other words, honestly and intelligently. Why should I not trust a democrat as well as a republican, if he be an honest man, representing my district? If he does not represent my district truly, the majority of the people will ascertain that fact and will give him leave to stay at home on another occasion. I believe, sir, that no matter how strict or straight-out may be a member of the Legislature in his political opinions, he must always, if he be a faithful man, regard the interests of his locality as the business on which he is sent to the Legislature. If this be not the fact, what becomes of local or district representation? What virtue or significance is there in the "representative of a district" if the man elected as such fails to represent such district, and the wants and claims of its people, without distinction of party? I hold that the district member is the delegate of all the people who took part in the election which returned him to a seat. He is no mouthpiece or instrument of a mere accidental majority, or, it may be, only a plurality. Once elected, he becomes a depository of the trust of the people, or he becomes recreant to his trust, and no proper representative. If this is not so, then if a member could be chosen out of twenty or forty candidates by a plurality of only one or two hundred votes, he must be the representative of that fragment of the people of his district, instead of all the people. I deny and reject all such assumptions of partisan responsibility in a representative, and partisan responsibility only. I hold the political representative fast to his political faith, and to the principles and policy of that faith, developed in State issues and State measures which know neither locality nor class. But I hold the civil or local representative, though he be the same man, just as fast to his duty as a delegate of the entire people of the district from which he comes. The people of that district are his masters and principals in regard to all local interests. The majority of that people will take care of him and his personal interests. If a wrong be perpetrated by the majority of one year, I believe in making that majority a minority of the next year, and thus correcting the wrong. A democratic system presupposes this majority rule. It is the only lever we have for uprooting and overthrowing a corrupt and demoralizing partisanship. It is the natural revolution of opinion, operating like the healthful force of a thunderstorm. By it and through it, the commonwealth shall be kept pure and strong. If we have a majority continually ruling and the minority merely represented as a minority, we should be in a state of stagnation. Sir, we require these abrupt changes; we must have these uprisings of minorities to keep the majorities in order, and preserve a robust, healthy commonwealth. Therefore, I consider all these new schemes for the representation of minorities, from whatever source they come, as mere obstructions, more poetical than practical.

Mr. N. M. ALLEN—Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FOLGER—I move that the committee now rise, report progress and ask leave to set again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Folger and it was declared carried, on a division, by a vote of 69 to 37.

Whereupon the committee arose, and the President resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. FULLER from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their chairman to report that fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on granting leave.

Mr. GREELEY—I move that leave be granted with instructions to the Committee of the Whole to report to the Convention at one o'clock P. M. to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], will send his amendments to the Secretary.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I submit that the amendment of the gentleman is in the nature of a resolution, that it amounts to that, and must lie over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair holds that it is within the province of the Convention to make such instructions.

Mr. WEED—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Weed, and it was declared lost.

Mr. ALVORD—I trust that we shall not have a repetition of the same kind of procedure that we had a few days since when there was up for consideration before this Convention the question of suffrage. If we are to continue thus in the now in order, there being two amendments pending.

The question was then put on the second division of the amendment of Mr. Ballard, being the provision that each district shall choose one Senator, and it was declared carried.

The CHAIRMAN then announced the question on the third subdivision of the amendment offered by Mr. Ballard, being the provision in reference to the apportionment of the State into thirty-two senate districts.

Mr. WEED — May I ask if, in the opinion of the Chair, an amendment to substitute will be in order, if the substitute offered by the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] is adopted? I ask it with reference to the vote upon the coming proposition?

The CHAIRMAN — It will depend upon what the amendment is.

Mr. WEED — Any amendment that is germane will be in order?

The CHAIRMAN — It will.

The SECRETARY commenced to read the pending division of the amendment of Mr. Ballard.

Mr. CONGER — I desire to ask whether the apportionment now being read by the Clerk is precisely the same as that contained in the Constitution of 1846 as amended by law last winter?

The CHAIRMAN — The Chair is informed that it is.

Mr. BALLARD — As some of the gentlemen have not been here during the debate, I will state that the distribution of territory is the same as it now stands in the session laws of 1866.

The question was then put on the third division of the amendment of Mr. Ballard to the amendment of Mr. E. Brooks to the second section reported by the committee, and it was declared carried.

Mr. A. J. PARKER — I suppose an amendment is now in order.

The CHAIRMAN — The Chair is of opinion that it is.

Mr. A. J. PARKER — I wish to offer an amendment which I think will secure all the advantages that have been hoped for from larger districts as the question has been discussed here, and which will also secure a continuous representation in the Senate, one-half only going out of office every two years. And it will secure what I deem still more important, the representation of minorities, by providing that four Senators shall be elected in each of the eight districts to be apportioned by the next Legislature, and that no elector shall vote for more than three candidates. This will be a means of representing minorities throughout the entire State, and it will be the first introduction of that mode of representation which has been recognized in any of our legislative bodies. It will answer the very purpose that many of us hoped to secure by voting for the single district system, and it will secure the representation of minorities much better than the single district system, because it secures them in every district of the State. I will read the substitute that I propose to offer for the second section:

Sec. 2. The Legislature for 1869 shall divide the State into eight senate districts, to be numbered from one to eight inclusive; each district to contain, as nearly as may be, an equal number of inhabitants, excluding aliens. No county shall be divided except it shall contain a greater population than is necessary for one Senate district.

There shall be thirty-two Senators, four to be elected in each senate district. The term of office shall be four years, except that the Senators chosen at the first election, in the first, third, fifth and seventh districts shall hold their offices for two years only.

The first election shall take place at the general election in 1868, and no elector shall, either at the first or at any subsequent election, vote for more than three candidates.

To carry out this system by which minorities are to be represented, you provide that no elector shall vote for more than three candidates. But it is indispensable that four should be chosen at that election. That is accomplished by having the elections take place at alternate periods in the different districts. In the first, third, fifth and seventh, they elect at first for two years which simply puts the system in operation. After the first election, they always choose for four years, and in all cases in all the districts they elect four candidates at every election. In voting for four Senators no elector votes for more than three candidates. I believe this will accomplish the object in view by those who favor larger districts and I believe it will also answer the wishes of those who have voted for single districts, upon the principle that it secured the representation of minorities. I voted for the smaller districts for that reason, and I know of many others who voted for it for the same reason. Now, a wish has been expressed in this room and elsewhere in favor of having minorities represented. One system has already been presented by the distinguished delegate from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. It is certainly well worthy of examination. But it does not seem to me as practical as the one I offer. I propose one that is simple, and which the whole people can readily understand, when this matter is submitted to them, which will admit of no frauds, and which I believe will answer the object in view. I admit it does not secure an exact representation of minorities, but it secures a representation, to some extent, of minorities in every district of the State. In every district the minority will be represented by one-quarter of the Senators from that district — one of the four Senators. I, therefore, offer this amendment.

Mr. EVARTS — In the position in which the Committee now finds itself placed, Mr. Chairman, I shall take great pleasure in supporting the amendment of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. A. J. Parker], supposing that hereafter any modification suggested as to a classification of the senatorial districts, permitting two to be replaced every year instead of four every two years, and which will not infringe upon the principle of his arrangement at all, may be introduced and receive perhaps the assent of the committee and of the Convention. This measure does not necessarily include the proposition of the final adhesion of the committee or certainly of the Convention, to this particular form of minority representation or even perhaps to any form of minority representation. For my own part, I have hundred and sixty-seven, shall be strictly applied to that purpose, and to no other purpose or object whatever.

The said several debts shall be fully paid by the first day of October, 1878, and if in any fiscal year there shall not be contributed from said revenues at least the sum of $2,418,000, the deficiency shall be supplied by taxation the next year, unless in one or more of the years before such deficiency shall have occurred, there shall have been appropriated to said sinking fund over and above the said sum of $2,418,000, a surplus sufficient to make up said deficiency. The tax authorized to be levied to provide for the sinking fund to pay the floating canal debt, is hereby suspended after the first day of October, 1867.

§ 4. After the debts specified in section two are fully paid or provided for, according to the provisions of section three, the remaining revenues of the canals, after paying the said expenses of collection, superintendence and ordinary repairs, shall, in each fiscal year, be paid into the treasury of the State to pay the amount advanced for canal purposes by taxation, specified in the first section, and the interest thereon, until the whole amount so advanced, with interest at five per cent per annum, shall be fully paid, and until any amount hereafter advanced for canal debts or other canal purposes, with interest thereon at five per cent per annum, shall be fully paid.

§ 5. After complying with the provisions of the third and fourth sections of this article, and after paying said expenses of collection, superintendence and ordinary repairs, the surplus revenues of the canals shall, in each fiscal year, be disposed of for the improvement of the canals, or in such other manner as the Legislature may direct, but shall at no time be anticipated or pledged.

§ 6. All sums which shall be paid into the treasury under the provisions of section four of this article, shall be appropriated and applied in each fiscal year as follows, viz.: Until the debt specified in the first section as the bounty debt, or the debt created in renewal thereof as hereinafter provided, shall be paid or provided for, the said sum or sums shall be appropriated and set apart to the sinking fund provided for the payment of said debt, or the said renewal thereof, and the tax to supply said sinking fund shall be correspondingly reduced. The Comptroller is hereby authorized to renew the said bounty debt or any part thereof, by extending the time of its payment to the first day of October, 1885, and to issue stock for that purpose, which he may apply either in exchange for the outstanding stock, or by sale in the usual manner, and the application of the proceeds thereof to the purchase of the outstanding stock. The stock so to be issued shall not bear interest to exceed seven per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and shall be exchanged or negotiated on the best possible terms, and in no event at less than par, nor at a lower rate than the outstanding stock can be purchased for at the time the sale or exchange shall be effected. The principal and interest of the stock hereby authorized to be issued shall be secured by a sinking fund to be provided for in accordance with the provisions of the fourteenth section of this article. After the said bounty debt and the said renewal thereof shall be paid or provided for, the sum or sums so paid into the treasury shall be appropriated toward the ordinary and necessary expenses of the State government; and if in any year there shall be more than sufficient paid into the treasury for that purpose, the surplus may be disposed of by the Legislature.

§ 7. The claims of the State against any incorporated company, to pay the interest and redeem the principal of the stock of the State, loaned or advanced to such company, shall be fairly enforced, and not released or compromised, and the moneys arising from such claims shall be set apart and applied to the payment of said stock, so loaned, or to repay the money which may be advanced to pay the same.

§ 8. Every contribution or advance to the canals or their debt, from any source other than their direct revenues, shall be repaid into the treasury, with interest, for the use of the State out of the canal revenues, as soon as it can be done consistently with the just rights of the creditors holding the debts specified in section number two; and except to provide for the payment of the debts specified in section number two, no tax shall hereafter be imposed upon the people of this State for works of internal improvement or their debts unless authorized by a vote of the people according to section fourteen of this article.

§ 9. The Legislature shall not sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of any of the canals of the State; but they shall remain the property of the State, and under its management forever.

§ 10. No moneys shall ever be paid out of the treasury of this State, or any of its funds, or any of the funds under its management, except in pursuance of an appropriation by law, nor unless such payment be made within two years next after the passage of such appropriation act; and every such law making a new appropriation, or continuing or reviving an appropriation, shall distinctly specify the sum appropriated and the objects to which it is to be applied, and it shall not be sufficient for such law to refer to any other law to fix such sum.

§ 11. Neither the credit, money, or property of the State shall in any manner be given or loaned to or in aid of any individual, association, or corporation.

§ 12. The State may, to meet casual deficits or failures in revenues, or for unexpected expenses not provided for, temporarily contract debts; but such debts, direct and contingent, singly or in the aggregate, shall not at any time exceed one million of dollars, and the moneys arising from the loans creating such debts shall be applied to the purposes for which they were obtained, or to repay the debt so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever.

§ 13. In addition to the above limited power to contract debts, the State may contract debts to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or defend the State in war; but the money arising from the contracting of such debts shall be applied to the purpose for which it was raised, or to repay such debts, and to no other purpose whatever.

Committee of the Whole in the future to such a length, we shall be compelled by some action of the Convention to shorten up the time in which we can discuss questions. We can very well determine in the Convention that upon each separate section of any article submitted to us the Committee of the Whole shall, upon a certain time and hour stated, take a vote upon that section, and in that way, so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned, we will enable it, at some definite period, to report to the Convention. But in taking a portion of this business into the Convention, by reason of having only gone through with a small portion of the report in Committee of the Whole, makes the Convention, for a portion of the time, for all practical purposes, a Committee of the Whole. I will act with the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], or the other gentleman, on a proposition which shall arrange that the Committee of the Whole shall be instructed, at a certain time, to take into consideration the first section, at another hour the second section, another hour the third section, and thus fix a time when a vote shall be taken upon each, so that the whole matter will have been wholly gone over before it is brought before the Convention, and which will thus limit the time of debate, as it ought to be limited, to matters pertaining to the subject and proposed by way of amendment in Committee of the Whole. By this means we shall put an end to our labors and arrive at a result.

Mr. FOLGER—I move the previous question.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Folger for the previous question, and it was declared carried.

Mr. GREELEY—I call for the ayes and noes.

Not a sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were not ordered.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Greeley, and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

Mr. FOLGER—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Folger, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, August 7, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. R. H. ROBINSON.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday, and there being no objection thereto, it was declared approved.

Mr. ENDRESS presented the memorial of Mr. Ira Godfrey and one hundred and three others, of Lima, Livingston county, in favor of submitting to the people a separate clause of the Constitution prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Mr. GREELEY presented the memorial of Dr. George I. Benedict and other citizens of the county of Kings, for the same object.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. STRATTON—I present a memorial fifty-two feet in length, and signed by nine hundred and thirty-two citizens of the city of New York, asking that the Legislature be prohibited from passing any law to prohibit the traffic in fermented liquors and wines, and asking that all laws regulating the sale, be uniform throughout the State.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. WAKEMAN presented the petition of George R. Low and one hundred and seventeen others, praying for the adoption of an article in the Constitution forbidding the manufacture and vending of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. GROSS presented memorials from citizens of Morrisania, Poughkeepsie, and New York, against prohibitive legislation and in favor of passing uniform laws for the regulation of the traffic in fermented liquors and wines.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. CHURCH from the Committee on the Finances of the State, etc., submitted a report, which the Secretary proceeded to read, as follows:

The Committee on State Finances, etc., have had under consideration the subjects referred to them, and a majority of said committee respectfully report the following article, and recommend its adoption by the Convention:

§ 3. After paying the expenses of collection, superintendence and ordinary repair, there shall be appropriated and set apart in each fiscal year, commencing on the first day of October, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, the whole of the remaining revenues of the State canals, as a sinking fund, to pay the interest as it falls due, and redeem the principal of the several debts specified in section two of this article, until the said several debts shall be fully paid or provided for; and the principal and income of said sinking fund, together with the principal and income of the sinking funds now provided for the payment of said debts, which shall have accumulated on the first day of October, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, shall be strictly applied to that purpose, and to no other purpose or object whatever.

The said several debts shall be fully paid by the first day of October, 1878, and if in any fiscal year there shall not be contributed from said revenues at least the sum of $2,418,000, the deficiency shall be supplied by taxation the next year, unless in one or more of the years before such deficiency shall have occurred, there shall have been appropriated to said sinking fund over and above the said sum of $2,418,000, a surplus sufficient to make up said deficiency. § 4. After the debts specified in section two are fully paid or provided for, according to the provisions of section three, the remaining revenues of the canals, after paying the said expenses of collection, superintendence and ordinary repairs, shall, in each fiscal year, be paid into the treasury of the State to pay the amount advanced for canal purposes by taxation, specified in the first section, and the interest thereon, until the whole amount so advanced, with interest at five per cent per annum, shall be fully paid, and until any amount hereafter advanced for canal debts or other canal purposes, with interest thereon at five per cent per annum, shall be fully paid.

§ 5. After complying with the provisions of the third and fourth sections of this article, and after paying said expenses of collection, superintendence and ordinary repairs, the surplus revenues of the canals shall, in each fiscal year, be disposed of for the improvement of the canals, or in such other manner as the Legislature may direct, but shall at no time be anticipated or pledged.

§ 6. All sums which shall be paid into the treasury under the provisions of section four of this article, shall be appropriated and applied in each fiscal year as follows, viz.: Until the debt specified in the first section as the bounty debt, or the debt created in renewal thereof as hereinafter provided, shall be paid or provided for, the said sum or sums shall be appropriated and set apart to the sinking fund provided for the payment of said debt, or the said renewal thereof, and the tax to supply said sinking fund shall be correspondingly reduced. The Comptroller is hereby authorized to renew the said bounty debt or any part thereof, by extending the time of its payment to the first day of October, 1885, and to issue stock for that purpose, which he may apply either in exchange for the outstanding stock, or by sale in the usual manner, and the application of the proceeds thereof to the purchase of the outstanding stock. The principal and interest of the stock hereby authorized to be issued shall be secured by a sinking fund to be provided for in accordance with the provisions of the fourteenth section of this article. After the said bounty debt and the said renewal thereof shall be paid or provided for, the sum or sums so paid into the treasury shall be appropriated toward the ordinary and necessary expenses of the State government; and if in any year there shall be more than sufficient paid into the treasury for that purpose, the surplus may be disposed of by the Legislature.

§ 7. The claims of the State against any incorporated company, to pay the interest and redeem the principal of the stock of the State, loaned or advanced to such company, shall be fairly enforced, and not released or compromised, and the moneys arising from such claims shall be set apart and applied to the payment of said stock, so loaned, or to repay the money which may be advanced to pay the same.

§ 11. Neither the credit, money, or property of the State shall in any manner be given or loaned to or in aid of any individual, association, or corporation.

§ 12. The State may, to meet casual deficits or failures in revenues, or for unexpected expenses not provided for, temporarily contract debts; but such debts, direct and contingent, singly or in the aggregate, shall not at any time exceed one million of dollars, and the moneys arising from the loans creating such debts shall be applied to the purposes for which they were obtained, or to repay the debt so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever.

§ 13. In addition to the above limited power to contract debts, the State may contract debts to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or defend the State in war; but the money arising from the contracting of such debts shall be applied to the purpose for which it was raised, or to repay such debts, and to no other purpose whatever.

Committee of the Whole in the future to such a length, we shall be compelled by some action of the Convention to shorten up the time in which we can discuss questions. We can very well determine in the Convention that upon each separate section of any article submitted to us the Committee of the Whole shall, upon a certain time and hour stated, take a vote upon that section, and in that way, so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned, we will enable it, at some definite period, to report to the Convention. But in taking a portion of this business into the Convention, by reason of having only gone through with a small portion of the report in Committee of the Whole, makes the Convention, for a portion of the time, for all practical purposes, a Committee of the Whole. I will act with the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], or the other gentleman, on a proposition which shall arrange that the Committee of the Whole shall be instructed, at a certain time, to take into consideration the first section, at another hour the second section, another hour the third section, and thus fix a time when a vote shall be taken upon each, so that the whole matter will have been wholly gone over before it is brought before the Convention, and which will thus limit the time of debate, as it ought to be limited, to matters pertaining to the subject and proposed by way of amendment in Committee of the Whole. By this means we shall put an end to our labors and arrive at a result.

Mr. FOLGER—I move the previous question.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Folger for the previous question, and it was declared carried.

Mr. GREELEY—I call for the ayes and noes.

Not a sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were not ordered.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Greeley, and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

Mr. FOLGER—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Folger, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, August 7, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. R. H. ROBINS-SON.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday, and there being no objection thereto, it was declared approved.

Mr. ENDRESS presented the memorial of Mr. Ira Godfrey and one hundred and three others, of Lima, Livingston county, in favor of submitting to the people a separate clause of the Constitution prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adult-erated Liquors.

Mr. GREELEY presented the memorial of Dr. George I. Benedict and other citizens of the county of Kings, for the same object.

Which took a like reference.

Mr. STRATTON—I present a memorial fifty-two feet in length, and signed by nine hundred and thirty-two citizens of the city of New York, asking that the Legislature be prohibited from passing any law to prohibit the traffic in fermented liquors and wines, and asking that all laws regulating the sale, be uniform throughout the State.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. WAKEMAN presented the petition of George R. Low and one hundred and seventeen others, praying for the adoption of an article in the Constitution forbidding the manufacture and vending of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. GROSS presented memorials from citizens of Morrisania, Poughkeepsie, and New York, against prohibitive legislation and in favor of passing uniform laws for the regulation of the traffic in fermented liquors and wines.

Which took the same reference.

Mr. CHURCH from the Committee on the Finances of the State, etc., submitted a report, which the Secretary proceeded to read, as follows:

The Committee on State Finances, etc., have had under consideration the subjects referred to them, and a majority of said committee respectfully report the following article, and recommend its adoption by the Convention:

ARTICLE.—

SEC. 1. The outstanding debts of the State and other liabilities for the payment of which the canal revenues are pledged by the terms of the Constitution of 1846, and the amendment of 1854, are the following on the 1st day of July, 1867:

The old canal debt of 1846 (so called),	$3,338,000 00
The general fund debt,	5,642,000 00
The canal debt under amendment of 1854,	10,307,000 00
The floating canal debt,	1,700,000 00
Advances to the canal debt sinking fund and other canal purposes, by taxation since 1846, and simple interest at five per cent,	18,007,288 00

Making an aggregate of,	$39,414,978 00
The debt of the State for which the canal revenues are not pledged or liable, is the bounty debt (so called) of,	26,944,000 00
Besides which is the contingent debt of the State, of,	218,000 00

§ 2. The several debts specified in the preceding section, designated as the old canal debt of eighteen hundred and forty-six, the general fund debt, the canal debt under the amendment of eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and the floating canal debt, amounting in the aggregate to $21,407,682.22 on the first day of July, 1867, shall be paid as provided in the next section.

§ 3. After paying the expenses of collection, superintendence and ordinary repair, there shall be appropriated and set apart in each fiscal year, commencing on the first day of October, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, the whole of the remaining revenues of the State canals, as a sinking fund, to pay the interest as it falls due, and redeem the principal of the several debts specified in section two of this article, until the said several debts shall be fully paid or provided for; and the principal and income of said sinking fund, together with the principal and income of the sinking funds now provided for the payment of said debts, which shall have accumulated on the first day of October, eighteen

The fourth section provides for the repayment into the treasury of advances drawn from the people by taxation since 1846, and used in payment of canal debts, and in the construction and improvement of the public works.

These advances were made under the following pledge contained in the Constitution of 1846, for their reimbursement: "Every contribution or advance to the canals, or their debt, from any any source other than direct revenues, shall, with quarterly interest at the rates then current, be repaid into the treasury for the use of the State out of the canal revenues, as soon as it can be done consistently with the just rights of the creditors holding the said canal debt."

The amount of principal of these advances is,..... $14,896,767 97

Although the requirement in the Constitution is, that these advances shall be repaid with quarterly interest at the "then current rates," the committee have deemed it advisable to add simple interest only, and at the lowest rate at which the State has borrowed any considerable sum of money. From the earliest period in the history of the public works, it has been deemed unjust, and improper to impose taxation upon the people for their construction or improvement. All parties have regarded the public works as a trust in the hands of the State, to be made self-sustaining on the one hand, and not a means of profit to be used for any than their own purposes, on the other. Advances therefore, from other sources than their direct revenues, have always been deemed a legitimate charge upon their revenues, to be returned as soon as practicable.

The Convention of 1846, by the provisions of article 7, in the present Constitution, intended to make a full settlement between the canals and the general fund of the State for advances made prior to that time, which was ratified by the people, and has since been regarded by all officers of the government and the people as a finality upon that subject, and then, having provided for the payment of the debts of the State in a shorter period than the revenues would be likely to pay, the Convention incorporated into the Constitution the foregoing pledge.

When the outstanding debts are paid, the time will have arrived when this obligation is to be fulfilled, and the committee deem it but an act of imperative justice, demanded alike by established policy and good faith, and by constitutional obligation imposed and exacted by the people themselves, that definite and certain provision be made for the return of these sums to the treasury, from the revenues of the canals, for the use of the people of the State. If these sums had not been thus advanced, the canal debts would have been correspondingly larger than they now are, and but for the pledge in question the taxes would never have been tolerated.

The sixth section provides for a definite disposition of all sums, which may be returned to the treasury to pay these advances, in a manner that will reduce taxation upon the people to the extent of the sums so returned.

A proposition has been made to the committee to authorize the creation of an additional canal debt of $12,000,000, to be used in commencing a new enlargement of the present enlarged canals, by enlarging the locks thereon, and make such debt a charge upon the revenues of the canals prior to the payment of any portion of the advances before referred to.

It is claimed that the expenditure of this money will largely increase the capacity of the canals, cheapen transportation, and secure a largely increased amount of business.

The committee have considered this proposition, together with such reasons as have been offered in favor of it, and have arrived at the conclusion that it would be unwise to adopt it, at this time, as a part of the organic law of the State.

The committee do not deem it necessary, nor within the authority conferred by the Convention, to elaborate their views upon this question, and they shall content themselves with brief and general reasons for opposing the proposed scheme of debt and expenditure.

The present enlargement of the canals is but just completed. The State has been engaged in the work more than thirty years, and has expended upon the work $39,425,334.32. A water-way of seventy by seven, with expensive and permanent structures has been secured, capable of transporting boats of 250 tons burden. It is claimed that $12,000,000 will accomplish the proposed work, but according to all the past history of the State in constructing public works, the expenditure will double that sum.

It is proposed to undertake this work when materials and labor are extravagantly high, and when the expense of it will be double that of ordinary times. It is assumed that the demand for further expenditure will cease when the locks are enlarged, but enlarged locks may necessitate an enlarged water-way and a change of other structures, involving tens of millions more of debt and expenditure.

Under these circumstances, and in view of the financial condition of the State and country, the committee believe such a project ought not to be entertained without the existence of the clearest necessity and the most pressing reasons, and they are satisfied that neither necessity, nor sound policy, whether considered with reference to the canals themselves and their business, or the interests of the people at large, will justify or even excuse its adoption at the present time.

The capacity of the Erie canal to do business has never been reached, and scarcely approached. This is true with the canal in alleged bad repair, and with only the most ordinary force and facilities for passing through the locks where obstructions are likely to occur.

According to an estimate of the present State Engineer, the full capacity of the Erie canal will not be reached before 1882, estimating a uniform increase of business equal to the past twenty years.

In 1862, the State Engineer, Hon. Van B. Richmond, arrived at the same conclusion and calculated the capacity of the canal sufficient to transport to tide water 5,220,000 tons, and the testimony of all the engineers in the employ of § 14. Except the debts specified in the twelfth and thirteenth sections of this article, no debts shall be hereafter contracted by or on behalf of this State, unless such debt shall be authorized by a law for some single work or object to be distinctly specified therein; and such laws shall impose and provide for a collection of a direct annual tax to pay, and sufficient to pay the interest on such debt as it falls due; and also to pay and discharge the principal of such debt within eighteen years from the time of the contracting thereof.

No such law shall take effect until it shall, at a general election, have been submitted to the people, and have received a majority of all the votes cast for and against it at such election.

On the final passage of such bill in either house of the Legislature, the question shall be taken by ayes and noes, to be duly entered on the Journals thereof, and shall be: "Shall this bill pass, and ought the same to receive the sanction of the people?" The Legislature may, at any time after the approval of such law by the people, if no debt shall have been contracted in pursuance thereof, repeal the same, and may at any time, by law, forbid the contracting of any further debts under such law; but the tax imposed by such act, in proportion to the debt and liability which may have been contracted in pursuance of such law, shall remain in force and be irrevocable and be annually collected, until the proceeds thereof shall have made the provision hereinbefore specified to pay and discharge the interest and principal of such debt and liability.

The money arising from any loan, or stock, creating such debt or liability, shall be applied to the work or object specified in the act authorizing such debt or liability, or for the repayment of such debt or liability, and for no other purpose whatever. No such law shall be submitted to be voted on within three months after its passage, or at any general election when any other law, or any bill, or any amendment to the Constitution shall be submitted to be voted for or against.

§ 15. Every law which imposes, continues or revives a tax, shall distinctly state the tax and the object to which it is to be applied; and it shall not be sufficient to refer to any other law to fix such tax or object.

§ 16. No deficiency loan shall be made by or on behalf of the State for a longer period than is necessary to enable the sinking fund, provided for its payment, to accumulate an amount sufficient to discharge it; and in no case shall such loan be made for more than six years.

§ 17. The capitol of the State is hereby permanently located at the city of Albany, but the rebuilding of a new capitol shall not be undertaken within ten years from the adoption of this Constitution, nor shall any money be hereafter appropriated for that object until the expiration of that period.

Mr. CHURCH — I am obliged to ask the indulgence of the Convention to permit me to read the explanations of the report myself.

Mr. CHURCH proceeded to read the explanations, as follows:

The Committee on State Finances, etc., in the article proposed have endeavored to accomplish the following leading objects:

1. To simplify the State finances so that every citizen of ordinary understanding will be able to comprehend from the article itself the financial condition of the State and the arrangement made to pay the debts, regulate the expenses, and dispose of the revenues.

2. To provide for the certain payment of the outstanding debts within a limited period, to fulfill the obligations of the present Constitution and preserve perfectly the public faith.

3. To prohibit the creation of debts in future for any purpose or object whatever, except for protection against invasion or insurrection or defense in war, unless the same shall receive the affirmative sanction of the people.

4. To restrict the Legislature in the appropriation of public moneys to the necessary purposes of a proper administration of the State government — to reduce taxation and thus relieve the labor and industry of the State, as far as practicable, from the excessive burdens now resting upon them.

The outstanding debts, for which the canal revenues are pledged, amount to, ..... $21,407,622 23
There will be in the sinking funds on the 1st of October, 1867, applicable to the payment of said debts, the sum of, ..... 2,755,595 00

The payment of these debts is first provided for out of the revenues of the canals, by section 3, of the proposed article, in substantial compliance with the provisions of the present Constitution, but varying somewhat in the detail of accomplishing the object. Instead of separate sinking funds for each debt constituting the foregoing amount, the committee have provided a single sinking fund for the payment of all of said debts into which the whole net revenues of the canal are to be paid until the whole debts are fully discharged, which will be in the year 1878, estimating the net revenues at $2,418,000, the average for the past ten years; and that is the period when the said debts would be paid by the terms of the present Constitution upon the same estimate of revenues.

Said section imperatively requires payment of these debts by the year 1878, and provides for supplying deficiencies by taxation if the revenues fall short of the annual estimates. The advantages of a consolidated sinking fund are, that it enables the State officers to apply any money in the fund to the payment of any of the indebtedness as it matures, and thus obviate the inconvenience of accumulating money in one sinking fund when there is a deficiency in another.

It also prevents the renewal of debts when they might be paid, and saves to the State the loss of two per cent interest upon such accumulations. It will be impossible if the proposed third section is adopted, to extend, by renewal or otherwise, any portion of the foregoing indebtedness beyond 1878, while if the revenues exceed the estimates, they will be provided for at an earlier period, and the revenues released from the obligation for their payment.

But the committee believe that the people ought to insist, and that they will insist upon the reimbursement of the advances drawn from them by taxation.

The financial condition of the State, and the excessive taxation now being imposed upon the people, furnish to the minds of the committee conclusive reasons, if there were no other, against the creation of additional indebtedness. This condition, and the amount of taxes upon the people of the State, will be briefly stated.

The outstanding debts of the State amount to, .....	$48,351,682 22
The debts of the cities, villages, counties, and towns, .....	85,000,000 00
Making a total of State indebtedness of .....	$133,351,682 22
The proportion of the national debt belonging to this State to pay is not less than, .....	500,000,000 00
Making a total of, .....	$633,351,682 22

Saying nothing of the unascertained national indebtedness, which high authority has placed at the same amount.

The highest assessed valuation of all the property in the State is $1,639,432,615; from which it will be seen that this State is permanently indebted to considerably more than one-third of the assessed value of the property therein.

The annual taxation is very much larger than even the permanent debt would indicate.

Direct taxation by the State, .....	$12,800,000
Direct taxation by counties and towns, .....	32,000,000
Direct taxation by cities and villages, estimated, .....	18,000,000

INDIRECT TAXES.

The whole amount of Internal Revenue received by the United States Government during the fiscal year ending 1st July, 1896, was $310,906,984, of which this State paid in fact one-fourth, but say one-fifth, .....	$62,181,398 80
The amount collected by the tariff was nearly $300,000,000, of which the people of this State must have paid, as consumers, one-fifth, amounting in the aggregate to $60,000,000 in gold, which is equal in currency to, .....	56,000,000 00

which is more than eleven per cent on the assessed valuation of property, and equals a tax of $45 upon every man, woman and child in the State, and more than $200 upon every voter.

If this excessive annual taxation should be capitalized, it would require the sum of $3,000,000,000 at six per cent to pay it, which is $1,400,000,000 more than the assessed value of the whole property.

If, therefore, the present amount of taxation is to be regarded as permanent, and cannot be materially reduced, the unwelcome truth must be acknowledged, that the property of the State is mortgaged to more than the amount of its full value.

It is estimated that three and one-half per cent upon the value of property, is a liberal allowance for the net profits of the people.

This brief statement shows that taxation has reached a point largely beyond the entire net earnings of the whole people, and is absorbing the capital with fearful rapidity. No argument is needed to establish the fact that such an extent of taxation cannot be permanently endured. It is no longer a matter of choice but of ability. The people have borne these exactions with unexampled patriotism and patience, but they have a right to demand, and your committee believe do demand from this Convention, some alleviation from present, and protection against future burdens.

The proposed measure will prevent, to the extent of the debt created and the interest thereon the application of the sums to be returned to the treasury for the advances to the canals, in reducing taxation. The policy adopted in the proposed article commends itself to the committee on the ground, also, of prudence and safety, as a protection against any unforeseen misfortune or disaster affecting the business interests of the country. No one could have anticipated that the short space of seven years would have changed the condition of the people of New York from that of comparative freedom from taxation to the most overburdened and heavily taxed people in the civilized world. The last war increased the business of our canals by blockading other channels of communication; the next war may blockade the canals themselves. Pestilence or famine may come upon us, withering the very sources of our prosperity, and the only path to financial safety lies in the direction of prudence and rigid economy.

The question for New York is, whether she will endeavor to check the spirit of extravagance and lavish prodigality, so prevalent in public and private affairs, by rigid financial provisions, which will insure the practice of economy and the observance of plighted public faith; or whether the great power of her influence shall be used to swell the force of that advancing tide, which threatens to submerge public and private credit, and bankrupt every business interest of the country.

The committee have retained all the restrictions upon the Legislature, with reference to appropriating public money, contained in the present Constitution, and have added some others.

They propose to prohibit the Legislature from imposing any tax upon the people for works of internal improvement. The committee believe that the time has arrived for the enforcement, by constitutional provisions, of a principle which has always been recognized in this State. The present canals of the State can be kept in repair from their revenues, and if extensive improvements or new works shall be hereafter authorized, they should be constructed with current revenues, or by the creation of debts contracted in pursuance of the Constitution.

The committee have also introduced a provision prohibiting the Legislature from giving or loaning the money or property of the State. This provision will be, it is believed, most salutary, and will result in a large saving to the people annually. It involves a general principle, applicable to numerous cases which have heretofore occurred, absorbing large sums of money, the State has been entirely uniform since this subject has been agitated, and there is now, and will be for an indefinite period in future, abundant capacity in the Erie canal to transport all the property which will be brought to it; and as far as the committee have been able to ascertain, this is corroborated by those who are engaged in the practical business of navigating the canals. Some complaint has been made by the latter, that the canals are not in good repair, but they have never experienced any want of capacity.

The Auditor of the Canal Department in several reports to the Legislature, has demonstrated that the Erie canal is capable of transporting 4,000,000 of tons each way, estimating the longest period for passing a lock which has ever been claimed, while the greatest quantity ever transported one way was 2,916,094 tons, and that was in 1862, and a little less in 1863, in both of which years the business was largely increased in consequence of the war and the blockade of the Mississippi and other western and southern routes of transit.

But the Auditor says in his report of 1866: "We know the fact by experiment, that a boat can be passed through a lock in good order and well attended in a considerable less time than five minutes," and then shows upon that basis of five minutes, that the canal is capable of transporting 6,393,600 tons each way, which is considerably more than double the quantity brought to tide water in the exceptional year of 1862.

In speaking of those who claim that the capacity of the canal is overtaxed, the Auditor says: "When the subject is examined, disregarding local interests and other considerations always involved in the expenditure of public moneys, we shall find these speculations are mere chimeras, and that these fears will dissipate as idle wind." Every member of the Convention can easily examine for himself the basis upon which these calculations have been made, and the committee do not deem it necessary to incorporate the details into their report.

If the trifling expense of increasing the attendance upon the locks will add so much to the facilities of navigation, the committee assume that this course will be adopted whenever a necessity for it shall occur. The committee are entirely satisfied, that if temporary embarrassments have occurred at times when business was most crowded, they are attributable more to the want of thorough management, than any want of capacity.

Nor can the policy be justified on the ground of cheapening transportation. The tonnage on the canals is now transported for less than one-half the price of the tonnage on the railroads of the State, and if price alone determined the route, the canals would supersede all other means of transportation. But the committee believe that the increase of indebtedness would tend to perpetuate present prices of transportation, if it did not increase them. The increase of debt insures the continuance, if not the increase, of tolls upon property transported, and these tolls are a tax upon the commerce passing over the canals and add to the cost of transportation.

Your committee are persuaded that a reduced cost of transportation can be more certainly effected, by paying the existing canal debts, and reducing the tolls to such a nominal amount as will be necessary to keep the canals in good repair, than by piling up the debts, and rendering it necessary to continue or increase these large exactions.

In round numbers, the tolls amount to about one-third of the price of transportation on the canals, and if they could be removed, the canals would be placed in a condition for successful competition, superior to that to be attained in any other manner. Freedom from debt, and comparative freedom from tolls, constitute a policy which the State should permanently adopt in reference to the canals, and from which it should never have departed. Since the commencement of the enlargement, the surplus revenue of the canals has amounted to $61,307,917.07, while the whole amount expended upon all the canals has been only $52,610,551.41, showing that sufficient revenues have been received to have accomplished all that has been done—paid off the debt of six millions existing at the commencement, and nearly, if not quite, repaid all advances which had been made, and then have left the canals comparatively free from debt, and the commerce passing over it free from taxation.

The debt policy has absorbed more than one-half of all the net revenues, in the payment of interest on loans, to say nothing of the loss of large sums necessarily consequent upon the hurried expenditure of large amounts of money within short periods of time, and the occasional depreciation of the credit of the State.

It should be borne in mind in this connection, that the financial article presented by the committee is so arranged that the outstanding canal debts will be paid in eleven years, and if the revenues equal the average of the past seven years, they will be paid in nine years, and then if it should be desirable to reduce tolls so as to cheapen transportation, or for any other reason, it will be in the power of the people, through the Legislature, to do so, and thus prolong the time for the payment of the advances into the treasury. On the other hand, if the tolls are continued, the advances will be rapidly discharged, and the revenues freed from all charge or incumbrance. Either course may be made to result in a free channel of communication for all the commerce seeking transit through the State to the sea-board.

If the necessity for this measure was more pressing than your committee believe it to be, and if the policy and utility of it were more apparent, your committee would not consent to violate the constitutional pledge for the repayment of the advances before mentioned, without the clearest evidence that the people demand it. So far from this being the case, every indication of public sentiment invites and demands relief from the burdens of taxation.

Besides, the Constitution will contain ample provisions for the accomplishment of the proposed object, if it shall hereafter become necessary, or for any reason desirable.

The proposed article enables the people at any time to incur a debt for any purpose, and the Con

The PRESIDENT — The report will be referred to the Committee of the Whole and be printed.

Mr. HATCH — I desire to submit a minority report from the committee, which I will ask the Secretary to read:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The undersigned, approving many of the positions taken by a majority of the committee, respectfully presents the following as a statement of some of the considerations which have prevented entire concurrence in the conclusions of the majority.

REPORT.

The amendment recommended in the majority report applies the revenues of the canals, after deducting the cost of superintendence and ordinary repairs, for a period of above eleven years (until October 1. 1887) to the payment of the canal and general fund debts in the aggregate $21,417,681.22; and after that period appropriates for the general purposes of our State government the same net revenue to the payment of the $18,007,287.68, the sum of the advances to the canals since 1846, and the interest thereupon—a sum arrived at, however, upon the questionable basis adopted by the majority of the committee.

The policy thus recommended is the total opposite of that which has existed ever since the canal system of the State had its inception. It involves an entire cessation of that gradual enlargement and improvement of the canals which hitherto has been the general policy of the State, which has built up the canals, made them a splendid financial success, and poured through the State the great channels of internal trade, accompanied with incalculable consequent advantages. To the undersigned, it is plain that such a change is worse than retrogressive. It is experimental without progress. It substitutes for a system most successfully tried through every vicissitude of financial and political change, an untried policy. It substitutes for a system of growth and such development as has enabled our canals to almost keep pace with the requirements of commerce, a system of inactivity, most unmasterly, so to speak, for the reason that cessation of improvement for so long a period as that contemplated by the report of the majority of the committee, in this age of rapid progress, of shift and fluctuation in the channels and eddies of trade, of very necessity implies failure to meet the increasing requirements of the times, involves decay, and it well may be the utter failure of the great scheme of the State canals. In this great century of progress, the undersigned cannot regard that as an enlightened policy which shall, for eleven years, stop in its mid career of success the great scheme which has so long been the pride of the State, and thus afford the only possible opportunity for successful rivalry to contending routes and opposing views.

In the view of the undersigned, the greatest questions of State or even national policy are to be found in the unprecedented growth of the inland commerce of the country; and in consideration of the comparative advantages, disadvantages, capacities and claims of the various actual and possible lines of transit across the continent.

In the view of the undersigned, the canals of the State, as they have hitherto formed, in the future should form, in connection with the western lakes and with the Hudson, a most important link in the most practicable line across the whole continent. In the view of the undersigned, the enlargement of the capacity of the trunk canal, and the improvement of those lateral canals, the revenues and local traffic of which would hereafter pay for the improvement, is so entirely in consonance with the long tried policy of the State, and is absolutely demanded by the necessities of the immediate future and even of the present, that it would be worse than temerity to adopt the fundamental change recommended by the majority of the committee.

Entertaining these views, the undersigned cannot, with any regard to duty, avoid some expression, brief as the magnitude of the considerations will admit, of the reasons which compel dissent from the majority report, and some allusion to the history of the past which can best teach wisdom for the future.

The construction of the Erie canal was commenced in 1817. It was open for transportation of property in 1825. From the very commencement, the national character of the work was recognized, and it was foreseen that a navigable communication between lake Erie and the Atlantic ocean would promote, to use language then employed by the Legislature, "agriculture, manufactures and commerce between the States." The experience of almost half a century has fully approved the statesmanship which originally adopted our canal policy, which was to improve the natural advantages of our geographical position—to pass through our State the then undeveloped commerce of the West, and gradually to improve the facilities afforded to a degree requisite to meet the requirements of its growth.

The sagacity and foresight of the early friends of the Erie canal enabled them to see clearly in the future the necessity which would require this commercial highway. It was a gigantic enterprise, and only those who have studied the history of the times are able fully to appreciate its magnitude. Once completed, it immediately gave promise of future success, and comparatively little difficulty was found in securing its enlargement. So plain was the necessity, and so palpable the benefits which it conferred, that the work was pushed forward with enthusiasm. Of course, the patronage attending so large an expenditure of public money was accompanied by the usual amount of corruption, from which no government has ever yet been exempted, for no pure government has ever yet existed on this earth, except in the dreams of such visionaries as Sir Thomas Moore, in his Utopia.

Unable to oppose the popular tide of sentiment which had set in favor of speedy enlargement, localities distant from the trunk line sought to take advantage of it for selfish ends, and the lateral canal system was engrafted upon the original policy. From this date arose most of the difficulties with which the Erie canal has since had to contend. Canals of doubtful utility were projected and forced upon the acceptance of the State as concessions to local interest and to silence oppoand to others hereafter occurring, which, without this provision, would be deemed proper objects for State aid or bounty. Nothing is more dangerous or more corrupting than the practice which has lately prevailed of appropriating money for the benefit of railroad corporations, and taxing the people to supply the means.

It can be justified on no principle, and is usually made successful by a combination of influences in favor of different projects, without much regard to the merits of any.

The committee have felt some embarrassment on account of the necessary effect of this provision, in cutting off all appropriations for charitable purposes, except to such institutions as the State itself owns and controls.

But the practice of taxing the whole people of the State, for the support of local charities, operates unequally, and cannot, as your committee believe, find a justification in any sound principle of public policy.

The committee have therefore concluded to submit the provision, prohibiting all appropriations of this character, and leave to the judgment of the Convention, the question whether any modification shall be made in the respects referred to, or not.

The committee have considered the question, which has been for some time agitated, of rebuilding the capitol. The last Legislature appropriated the sum of $250,000 for that purpose, and limited the expense to four millions of dollars. The committee are satisfied, however, that this sum will fall far short of accomplishing the object, and that an annual tax of one million of dollars at least for ten years will be required. Although the present structure is inadequate, in some respects, to accommodate the growing wants of the State, yet it is sufficiently ample and commodious for present public purposes; and in view of the high price of every element involved in its structure, and to save an overburdened people from additional taxation, the committee have concluded to recommend the suspension of the work for ten years, by which time the public debts will either be paid or so materially reduced as not to be oppressive. The committee have, as well to prevent future controversy as in justice to the people of Albany who have contributed to this object, incorporated a provision permanently locating the capitol at the city of Albany.

The committee cannot refrain from remarking in connection with the subject of restrictions upon legislative power, that they have found it extremely difficult to draw the line between unalterable prohibitions and that discretion which must of necessity be reposed in the Legislature. They have selected classes of appropriations which they believed might be entirely cut off, and yet within the remaining powers improper and extravagant appropriations may be made, not within the competence of constitutional provisions to prevent, without impairing the usefulness of the legislative body.

The only effectual remedy for perfect fidelity in the representative, must be applied by the people themselves.

It is their duty to inform themselves of the manner in which public trusts have been discharged, and to hold representatives to a rigid accountability for their conduct. When this shall be done, there will be no occasion to complain of corrupt or even improper legislation.

Aside from canal revenues, the State has no permanent revenues, except the inconsiderable sums derived from auction and salt duties, and these are regarded of doubtful propriety—one being a tax upon the most common necessary of life, and the other upon trade and commerce. The State has received but little more than $100,000 annually, from both these sources, on an average for the past twenty years. All other means are obtained by direct taxation upon the property of the State.

The expenses of the State government have increased from $750,000 in 1846, to $3,500,000 in 1866—an increase far beyond any public necessity, and attributable only to that spirit of extravagance not to say corruption, pervading the administration of public affairs.

If the article proposed by the committee shall be adopted, the committee estimate that direct taxation will be reduced at once, about six millions of dollars annually.

The committee have not considered the subject of the proper principles of assessment and taxation, which was referred to them, and they also desire to present a provision on the subject of claims by individuals against the State, and beg leave to continue their labors upon these subjects.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I approve of the article and report, except the provision suspending the rebuilding of the capitol.
ERASTUS CORNING.

We concur in the article reported by the committee, with a single reservation. It deals with the canals on the assumption that their present capacity is adequate, and that their enlargement will not be necessary for many years, if ever. Of the correctness of that assumption we entertain a doubt. If the facts, as they are now in course of full and authentic ascertainment under a resolution of the Convention, shall not justify the assumption on which the reported article is based, we shall desire its modification to meet any ascertained necessity, near or more remote, for the enlargement of the canals.

ALBANY, August 7, 1867.

Mr. CHURCH—I ought to state that the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch] dissents from the report of the committee; and also that the gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Clarke] desires to make an additional report.

The PRESIDENT — The report will be referred to the Committee of the Whole and be printed.

Mr. HATCH — I desire to submit a minority report from the committee, which I will ask the Secretary to read:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The undersigned, approving many of the positions taken by a majority of the committee, respectfully presents the following as a statement of some of the considerations which have prevented entire concurrence in the conclusions of the majority.

REPORT.

The amendment recommended in the majority report applies the revenues of the canals, after deducting the cost of superintendence and ordinary repairs, for a period of above eleven years (until October 1. 1887) to the payment of the canal and general fund debts in the aggregate $21,417,681.22; and after that period appropriates for the general purposes of our State government the same net revenue to the payment of the $13,007,287.68, the sum of the advances to the canals since 1846, and the interest thereupon—a sum arrived at, however, upon the questionable basis adopted by the majority of the committee.

The policy thus recommended is the total opposite of that which has existed ever since the canal system of the State had its inception. It involves an entire cessation of that gradual enlargement and improvement of the canals which hitherto has been the general policy of the State, which has built up the canals, made them a splendid financial success, and poured through the State the great channels of internal trade, accompanied with incalculable consequent advantages. To the undersigned, it is plain that such a change is worse than retrogressive. It is experimental without progress. It substitutes for a system most successfully tried through every vicissitude of financial and political change, an untried policy. It substitutes for a system of growth and such development as has enabled our canals to almost keep pace with the requirements of commerce, a system of inactivity, most unwisely, so to speak, for the reason that cessation of improvement for so long a period as that contemplated by the report of the majority of the committee, in this age of rapid progress, of shift and fluctuation in the channels and eddies of trade, of very necessity implies failure to meet the increasing requirements of the times, involves decay, and it well may be the utter failure of the great scheme of the State canals. In this great century of progress, the undersigned cannot regard that as an enlightened policy which shall, for eleven years, stop in its mid career of success the great scheme which has so long been the pride of the State, and thus afford the only possible opportunity for successful rivalry to contending routes and opposing views.

In the view of the undersigned, the greatest questions of State or even national policy are to be found in the unprecedented growth of the inland commerce of the country; and in consideration of the comparative advantages, disadvantages, capacities and claims of the various actual and possible lines of transit across the continent.

In the view of the undersigned, the canals of the State, as they have hitherto formed, in the future should form, in connection with the western lakes and with the Hudson, a most important link in the most practicable line across the whole continent. In the view of the undersigned, the enlargement of the capacity of the trunk canal, and the improvement of those lateral canals, the revenues and local traffic of which would hereafter pay for the improvement, is so entirely in consonance with the long tried policy of the State, and is absolutely demanded by the necessities of the immediate future and even of the present, that it would be worse than temerity to adopt the fundamental change recommended by the majority of the committee.

Entertaining these views, the undersigned cannot, with any regard to duty, avoid some expression, brief as the magnitude of the considerations will admit, of the reasons which compel dissent from the majority report, and some allusion to the history of the past which can best teach wisdom for the future.

The construction of the Erie canal was commenced in 1817. It was open for transportation of property in 1825. From the very commencement, the national character of the work was recognized, and it was foreseen that a navigable communication between lake Erie and the Atlantic ocean would promote, to use language then employed by the Legislature, "agriculture, manufactures and commerce between the States." The experience of almost half a century has fully approved the state-manship which originally adopted our canal policy, which was to improve the natural advantages of our geographical position—to pass through our State the then undeveloped commerce of the West, and gradually to improve the facilities afforded to a degree requisite to meet the requirements of its growth.

The sagacity and foresight of the early friends of the Erie canal enabled them to see clearly in the future the necessity which would require this commercial highway. It was a gigantic enterprise, and only those who have studied the history of the times are able fully to appreciate its magnitude. Once completed, it immediately gave promise of future success, and comparatively little difficulty was found in securing its enlargement. So plain was the necessity, and so palpable the benefits which it conferred, that the work was pushed forward with enthusiasm. Of course, the patronage attending so large an expenditure of public money was accompanied by the usual amount of corruption, from which no government has ever yet been exempted, for no pure government has ever yet existed on this earth, except in the dreams of such visionaries as Sir Thomas Moore, in his Utopia.

Unable to oppose the popular tide of sentiment which had set in favor of speedy enlargement, localities distant from the trunk line sought to take advantage of it for selfish ends, and the lateral canal system was engrained upon the original policy. From this date arose most of the difficulties with which the Erie canal has since had to contend. Canals of doubtful utility were projected and forced upon the acceptance of the State as concessions to local interest and to silence opposition. They thus became burdens upon the trunk canal; and when the Erie canal was no longer able to bear these burdens, taxation followed, and with it has arisen an unjustifiable and indiscriminating clamor against all our canals.

The policy thus adopted, and partially carried out, loaded the State with an enormous debt, and diverted the revenues of the Erie canal to the support of the uncommemorative branches. The people have lost sight of this fact, and have justified an opposition to the whole system by the expense and taxation chargeable solely to the lateral canals. The wise development of our original canal policy is now threatened with destruction from a misapprehension of facts or an interested antagonism.

Every State has undoubted right to indemnify itself for the money it has advanced and the risk it has run in making any canal or road, by levying sufficient tolls on the articles of which it has thus facilitated the transit. It is impossible to imagine any more equitable method of levying a tax. The owner of the property thus passing to market profits by the transaction. But there is an obvious and important distinction between works belonging to individuals and those of which the State is the owner. In private companies carrying goods or making canals or roads, there is a right to make whatever profit can be made on freight or tolls. The principle of competition ordinarily checks undue extravagance or extortion in their charges. But in such a case as that of the Erie canal, the State has within its own limits virtually no competitor of the kind. If it levies tolls for profit, either to defray the expenses of the State or to be expended for any other purpose than those of the canal itself, tribute is in reality exacted from the people of other States, on the same principle as if tolls were levied on property carried through its domains by private companies. Such a State exacts money by the force of its geographical position.

No one will deny that whatever any single State has a right to do in this way, others have an equal right to do toward it. The Constitution of the United States wisely provides for freedom of commerce upon all the rivers and lakes. But as our country became more generally cultivated and more densely peopled, many lines of railroad and canal have been made, and the navigation of many rivers has been improved or completed by links of railroad or canal. A very large amount of the transit of property and passengers depends upon the connections made by the enterprise and labor of man. The question annually assumes proportions of greater magnitude. It becomes evident that unless some general rule or principle of action is adopted, results may ensue detrimental in the highest degree to that free commerce between the States on which the welfare of all so much depends.

Before the adoption of the Federal Constitution and in colonial times, embarrassments and restrictions upon internal trade similar in effect to these existed. The evil was of so great magnitude as to form a controlling reason for the adoption of a national Constitution, by which commerce between the States might be regulated and controlled. The whole spirit of the Constitution, as well as State and national policy, required that invidious measures should not be adopted in any State, and that each State, in this view most especially, should regard itself as but a part of the great whole—a part of a great nation, the prosperity and harmonious development of whole and part, in a most important measure, dependent upon substantial freedom in commercial communication of each with all the others.

The unprecedented development of this inland commerce can be briefly stated. No longer ago than 1825, the trade of the lakes was transacted in a few schooners of only thirty or forty tons. The arrivals and departures from Buffalo were only sixty-four. Last year the arrivals and departures were 14,000; the value of property passing through Buffalo, $256,000,000.

If we regard alone the statistics of the census reports as to the population, productions and resources of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, we are led to surprising results. In 1850, their population was only 5,403,595. Ten years later, in 1860, it had advanced to 8,955,962, having increased at the rate of 65.74 per cent in the brief space of ten years. At the same rate of progression they will, in 1870, have a population of 14,833,401; in 1880, it will be 24,584,878; and at the approaching termination of the present century it will amount to 66,788,208. So little have their resources been hitherto developed that, unless interrupted by the devastations of war, we may reasonably expect the present ratio of increase to be continued until the latest period here indicated. They have an area of 284,992,640 acres, of which little more than one-sixth has yet been brought under cultivation. In 1850, they produced 310,384,775 bushels of grain, including 43,842,038 bushels of wheat, and 222,208,502 of corn. In 1860, this product had been increased to 557,551,811 bushels, including 89,293,603 bushels of wheat, and 392,289,751 of corn. These eight food-producing States yielded more than 550,000,000 of cereals in 1859, a crop which was nearly one-third deficient in comparison with those of 1860 and 1861. The mind scarcely realizes the magnitude of quantities thus represented in abstract figures.

Beyond the chief region now known as the great grain producing States, but including Minnesota, Dacotah, and the Red river country, is a vast territory, well watered, possessing a sufficient supply of timber, of exceedingly fertile soil, peculiarly adapted to the production of wheat, yielding, for many years in succession, crops of such abundance as are scarcely credible to the inhabitants of less favored regions.

It is stated on competent authority that an area of not less than the whole of the United States east of the Mississippi exists west of the 98th meridian and above the 43d parallel. This region is now almost wholly unoccupied, but is perfectly adapted to the fullest occupation by civilized man. Spring opens about the same time along the vast expanse of plains stretching from St. Paul's to the Mackenzie river, a distance as great as that from St. Paul's to the southern extremity of the long peninsula of Florida, as far as from the most southerly point in the territory of the United States to Augusta, the central port in Maine.

The capacity of these vast regions when brought into practical connection with market and seaport, by rail, canal, or other artificial improvement, to increase the bulk of the cereal products of the country can be best illustrated by referring to a single instance of the kind among the many stated in the report made last winter by Gen. Warren to Congress, on the rivers and the proposed improvement of the Upper Mississippi. He reports that by constructing a canal thirteen miles long Cannon river can be connected with the Minnesota river, and a navigable channel thus established which would open to settlement and cultivation an area of land of 844,800 acres, two-thirds of which would be tillable, which would produce annually 20,000,000 bushels of grain—a productiveness which, according to another estimate in the same report adopted by him, deducting 4,000,000 bushels for consumption at the places of growth, would leave 16,000,000 for exportation to our eastern market.

A region is above described many times larger than that tributary to the commerce of Chicago, which will send its products to the eastern markets through ports near the western end of Lake Superior, their chief transit being by way of the lakes and by the Erie canal, through the State and to the city of New York, using the canal to the utmost possible capacity of its enlargement. Railways are now being constructed from St. Paul to the head of Lake Superior and to Pembina, on the borders of the British possessions. The numerous chains of lakes capable of being connected by short lines of canal with Lakes Winnipeg and Superior are a remarkable feature in the formation of this country. Five railroads, at least, are projected, and will probably soon be completed, connecting the great lines of traffic and transit in the interior with the head of Lake Superior.

It is not only with these regions that we shall soon have an extensive commerce. The Northern and Central Pacific railroads, as well as cheaper means of transit by water, or partly by rail and partly by water, will connect us with the Pacific coast. The incalculable value and rapid development of the rich mines of gold and silver and other metals, in the Rocky Mountains, extending nearly to the Pacific Ocean, and from north to south throughout the entire continent, promote with unprecedented rapidity the settlement of regions many hundreds of miles beyond those known within a few years as the "Far West." Beyond all these is the Pacific Ocean itself, already traversed by steamers from San Francisco to the vast and populous regions of the Orient, whose trade has always been and is to-day the great desideratum of the European nations.

It is a well known law of trade that it seeks the cheapest avenues of transportation to its centers, insurance and interest on capital covering risks, and time, being elements of cost. This consideration must bring over our Pacific railroads the trade of India, China, Japan, and the adjacent regions, and lead to the further conclusion that the eastern termination of these roads must be on the great lakes, so as to appropriate the benefits offered by cheap navigation on the way further east.

Already the extension of telegraphic facilities in China is the sure forerunner of internal railway communication which will revolutionize the society of that country, and enormously increase its foreign trade.

Some idea may be formed of the magnitude of the trade we shall acquire with those oriental nations from the fact that Japan alone has a population computed to be 35,000,000. Hindostan contains 160,000,000 of human beings, and the Chinese empire, with its enormous territory, and 367,000,000 of people, contains a greater amount of inhabitants and wealth than are elsewhere united under any one government. And to this may be added those populous regions, full of the most migratory races in Asia, between China and the Amoor river, where American enterprise has already penetrated, and from which Genghis Khan and Tamerlane descended with their immense armies to conquer the world.

But the most important consideration remains to be noticed—the addition to our national wealth, and the rapid development of our inland commerce which must be produced by the introduction into our country of the exhaustless supply of the laboring element of Asia. The immigration of the Mongolian races has already commenced. Thousands are already working in the fields and mines of our Pacific States and territories. The extent of this immigration can only be estimated by considering the swarming millions which this ancient hive of mankind has sent over the face of the earth. They are moving in an easterly direction as our Pacific railroads are constructed, and when these railways are completed, connecting with all our natural and artificial lines of transportation running to the Atlantic, who can doubt but what this immigration will move on, filling up our vast unoccupied area of the interior, their industry developing our inland commerce with a rapidity never known except in our own wonderful history. No difference in climate can prevent any such immigration, as an examination of the isothermal lines, traced from continent to continent by careful observations, made by the most scientific men, will show. Peking, San Francisco and New York, well to the northward in their respective countries, are of about the same temperature or on the same isothermal line, each about the fortieth degree of latitude. New Orleans and Canton are in the same isothermal line, well to the southward; Canton being, however, some eight degrees further to the south than New Orleans. Acclimation in the respective countries upon the same isothermal line will necessarily be easy, and no difficulty in the nature of things can exist in the development of our vast natural advantages in all that development which results in the greatest social, State, and national prosperity, through the employment of the millions which the growth of our means of transit will afford. Adam Smith, in his inquiry into the nature and causes of national wealth, finds the solution of the economic problem in the "annual labor of every nation," and the product of labor.

The increase of national wealth to be accomplished through the labors of nations thus to be won and added to the immeasurable natural advantages afforded through undeveloped territory, stretching through so many degrees of latitude, far transcending even the conceptions of man. History can afford no approach to its parallel, for no other nation has ever possessed a title of such undeveloped resource, with such opportunity for its development. Nor upon any limited scale can the past even hint at the possibilities of a future here indicated. An undeveloped empire invites the co-operation of millions, eager for employment, and invites that co-operation through means known only to the modern day—through the instrumentality of steam, and all the great inventions and improvements which so facilitate modern progress.

In estimating our inland commerce and transit, we must soon include the great overland trade and travel between Europe and Asia. At New York the various products of all these regions will meet shipping from the eastern ports of the Atlantic, and the multimarket products of the machinery of Europe, and of the industry and ingenuity of her people, as well as of our own, will in return be diffused throughout our continent and into Asia.

The central position of this continent, midway between Europe and Asia, makes our territory not only the highway for our own trade, but the great thoroughfare for the world, and at no distant time our metropolitan center will become the city of the world's commerce.

The ability of the Erie canal to meet the requirements of this vast and growing inland commerce can be best ascertained by stating its assumed maximum capacity for downward freight, 4,000,000 tons. To pass this large tonnage a boat must go through the Alexander lock (the recognized standard of tonnage of the Erie canal), every ten minutes during every day and hour of the season of navigation, irrespective of breaks or detentions. The annual tonnage of the Erie canal, from this and other States, for the last decade, is as follows:

YEAR.	From Western States, tons.	From this State, tons.	Total tons.
1865.....	1,092,876	227,839	1,420,715
1866.....	1,212,550	374,680	1,587,230
1867.....	918,998	197,301	1,117,199
1868.....	1,273,099	223,588	1,496,687
1869.....	1,036,634	414,699	1,451,333
1870.....	1,836,975	379,080	2,216,055
1871.....	2,154,425	291,184	2,445,609
1872.....	2,594,837	322,257	2,917,094
1873.....	2,279,252	398,437	2,677,689
1874.....	1,907,196	239,498	2,146,694
1875.....	1,903,612	173,533	2,077,145

If the local or internal traffic of the State is added to the through downward tonnage, the above amounts are largely increased. It is ascertained that in 1862, this item increased the tonnage to tide-water over 3,390,399. It is also a well known fact that when this amount of tonnage is pressed upon the Erie canal for transit, it creates detentions, increases price of freight, and large portions of western commerce are diverted into cheaper and speedier rival channels of transportation. No one could estimate the loss of tonnage at such times to the Erie canal less than half a million or more. The forthcoming testimony taken by the Canal committee in relation to the capacity of the Erie canal, will confirm these statements if anything more is required. In order to retain the western trade to the Erie canal, we must accommodate it with a more ample and cheaper transit. The tables of the statistics of the tonnage of the Erie canal, show that in every decade this tonnage has been doubled; and in the present capacity of the Erie canal, as is claimed by some, is now adequate, are we not imperatively called upon to make some provision for increase, to meet the demands of the future? The population and productions of the west, and the tonnage of the Erie canal, as has already been shown, have doubled in every decade for the last twenty years. No one can doubt but what this ratio of progress will be continued in the future, with a proportionate increase of revenues from the Erie canal, without we abandon our past wise canal policy. The necessity of the enlargement, and the means through which it can be accomplished by the application of the revenues of the Erie canal, have been so fully and so recently set forth and recommended in Governor Fenton's message, which is sustained in other official documents from the Comptroller, Auditor, Canal Commissioners and State Engineer, that it does not seem necessary to add to them. If their views are correct, the cost of transportation would be reduced, by a further enlargement of the Erie canal, one-half. There is no doubt that the increased traffic which would be invited to the Erie canal would enable the State to reduce the tolls, in a few years, one-half, and still leave an increasing surplus every year to pay off the present canal debt, with the additional debt to be paid from the revenues for immediate improvement; and then, if it must be so, pay back to the State the taxes which the people have paid for our unremunerative lateral canals—the bad investments of the State made to promote the interests of political parties or the ambitious schemes of politicians.

The Erie and Champlain canals have paid into the treasury the sum of $192,455,779.57, leaving a balance to their credit of profit and interest, above the cost of construction and maintenance, and all other expenses and charges, of $23,108,326.01.

Add to the above debt of the Champlain canal, as appears by the Auditor's reply to an inquiry by the committee, $2,943,089.92, and this would make the Erie canal a contributor to the State treasury from its surplus after paying for cost of construction and all other charges, $26,651,415.93. The inquiry naturally arises who paid these millions of tolls? An examination of the amount of the tonnage on the Erie canal for the last decade will show that they were mostly paid by the people of the Western States for the transportation of their

The increase of national wealth to be accomplished through the labors of nations thus to be won and added to the immeasurable natural advantages afforded through undeveloped territory, stretching through so many degrees of latitude, far transcending even the conceptions of man. History can afford no approach to its parallel, for no other nation has ever possessed a tithe of such undeveloped resource, with such opportunity for its development. Nor upon any limited scale can the past even hint at the possibilities of a future here indicated. An undeveloped empire invites the co-operation of millions, eager for employment, and invites that co-operation through means known only to the modern day—through the instrumentality of steam, and all the great inventions and improvements which so facilitate modern progress.

In estimating our inland commerce and transit, we must soon include the great overland trade and travel between Europe and Asia. At New York the various products of all these regions will meet shipping from the eastern ports of the Atlantic, and the multiform products of the machinery of Europe, and of the industry and ingenuity of her people, as well as of our own, will in return be diffused throughout our continent and into Asia.

The central position of this continent, midway between Europe and Asia, makes our territory not only the highway for our own trade, but the great thoroughfare for the world, and at no distant time our metropolitan center will become the city of the world's commerce.

The ability of the Erie canal to meet the requirements of this vast and growing inland commerce can be best ascertained by stating its assumed maximum capacity for downward freight, 4,000,000 tons. To pass this large tonnage a boat must go through the Alexander lock (the recognized standard of tonnage of the Erie canal), every ten minutes during every day and hour of the season of navigation, irrespective of breaks or detentions. The annual tonnage of the Erie canal, from this and other States, for the last decade, is as follows:

YEAR.	From Western States, tons.	From this State, tons.	Total tons.
1855.....	1,092,876	327,839	1,420,715
1856.....	1,212,550	374,580	1,587,130
1857.....	1,138,498	397,301	1,535,799
1858.....	1,273,999	223,583	1,497,582
1859.....	1,036,084	414,690	1,450,774
1860.....	1,896,975	370,086	2,267,061
1861.....	2,159,325	291,184	2,450,509
1862.....	2,594,387	322,257	2,916,644
1863.....	2,319,353	398,437	2,717,790
1864.....	1,907,136	239,496	2,146,632
1865.....	1,903,742	173,538	2,077,280

nage to tide-water over 3,390,399. It is also a well known fact that when this amount of tonnage is pressed upon the Erie canal for transit, it creates detentions, increases price of freight, and large portions of western commerce are diverted into cheaper and speedier rival channels of transportation. No one could estimate the loss of tonnage at such times to the Erie canal less than half a million or more. The forthcoming testimony taken by the Canal committee in relation to the capacity of the Erie canal, will confirm these statements if anything more is required. In order to retain the western trade to the Erie canal, we must accommodate it with a more ample and cheaper transit. The tables of the statistics of the tonnage of the Erie canal, show that in every decade this tonnage has been doubled; and in the present capacity of the Erie canal, as is claimed by some, is now adequate, are we not imperatively called upon to make some provision for increase, to meet the demands of the future? The population and productions of the west, and the tonnage of the Erie canal, as has already been shown, have doubled in every decade for the last twenty years. No one can doubt but what this ratio of progress will be continued in the future, with a proportionate increase of revenues from the Erie canal, without we abandon our past wise canal policy. The necessity of the enlargement, and the means through which it can be accomplished by the application of the revenues of the Erie canal, have been so fully and so recently set forth and recommended in Governor Fenton's message, which is sustained in other official documents from the Comptroller, Auditor, Canal Commissioners and State Engineer, that it does not seem necessary to add to them. If their views are correct, the cost of transportation would be reduced, by a further enlargement of the Erie canal, one-half. There is no doubt that the increased traffic which would be invited to the Erie canal would enable the State to reduce the tolls, in a few years, one-half, and still leave an increasing surplus every year to pay off the present canal debt, with the additional debt to be paid from the revenues for immediate improvement; and then, if it must be so, pay back to the State the taxes which the people have paid for our unremunerative lateral canals—the bad investments of the State made to promote the interests of political parties or the ambitious schemes of politicians.

The Erie and Champlain canals have paid into the treasury the sum of $192,455,779.57, leaving a balance to their credit of profit and interest, above the cost of construction and maintenance, and all other expenses and charges, of $23,108,326.01.

Add to the above debt of the Champlain canal, as appears by the Auditor's reply to an inquiry by the committee, $2 943,089.92, and this would make the Erie canal a contributor to the State treasury from its surplus after paying for cost of construction and all other charges, $26,651,415.93. The inquiry naturally arises who paid these millions of tolls? An examination of the amount of the tonnage on the Erie canal for the last decade will show that they were mostly paid by the people of the Western States for the transportation of their
